BRITON CLAIMS CASE FRAME-UP AT SOVIET TRIAL

Charges Plot on Firm's Engineers Based Upon Prisoners' Evidence.

DRAMATIC INCIDENT IN MOSCOW HEARING

Monkhouse, Halted by Judge, Fails to Continue His Explanation Later.

Moscow, April 15 (A.P.).—Allan Monkhouse, highest ranking of the six British engineers on trial for spying and sabotage, provided a double senation in court today by charging that the case was a frame-up and then failing to follow through with a detailed explanation of his accusation.

At the morning session Monkhouse interjected an unhesitating statement that the case was a "frame-up based on evidence of terrorized prisoners."

The court shut him off before he had his full say, but when he was called to the stand as the first witness of the night session he provided a flat anticlimax by failing to renew his demand for permission to make the declaration. The courtroom was crowded to capacity with a hand-picked Russian audience in anticipation of the statement.

Is Dramatic Incident.

The frame-up charge was one of the most dramatic incidents in the entire trial. Monkhouse suddenly arose in the prisoner's dock and, speaking in Russian, asked permission to make a statement. Judge Ulrich nodded assent.

The engineer, 6 feet tall, square of jaw, gray-haired and middle-aged, stepped to the judge's table. He said he wished to speak in English. There were objections, as his Russian is perfect, but finally the court consented.

Monkhouse first referred to testimony yesterday from L. A. Sukoruchkin, who accused L. C. Thornton, another of the British defendants, of plotting to paralyze electrical service in Moscow in the event of war.

Refers to Evidence.

"After listening to the statements of Soviet citizens yesterday and the day before," Monkhouse said, through the interpreter, "it is perfectly clear to me that this case is a frame-up against the Metropolitan-Vickers Co. engineers, based on evidence of terrorized prisoners.

"I know from my own experience when I was arrested and subjected to eighteen hours' continuous examination——"

There he was interrupted by Judge Ulrich, who ruled that he had no right to make a declaration at that particular time. Monkhouse argued, but without avail, although he was promised an opportunity to make his statement later.

Fails to Renew Demand.

Although he failed at the night session to renew his demand for permission to make the declaration, he did reiterate his complaint about protracted preliminary examination at the time of his arrest.

"After eighteen hours' examination I was tired, and therefore I must deny now the substance of what I told you then," he said.

Exchanging what amounted to almost good-natured banter with prosecutor Andrey Vishinsky, Monkhouse denied he ever had received any information from Metropolitan-Vickers employes except that which referred to the operations of his company's machinery. He flatly contradicted the prosecution's charge that the firm fostered sabotage activities at a number of Soviet electric stations.

Mother Gets Grewsome Burden at Her Door

SLAIN SON HANDED IN

Bearer Says Youth Was Shot in Auto Holdup

Miami, Fla., April 15 (A.P.).—A masked man stumbled up the steps of a Miami home last midnight to thrust the body of a slain son into a mother's arms, and a few hours later was arrested in Fort Lauderdale, where he told of an eerie ride over three States after a holdup, with the body huddled in the rear of a stolen automobile.

The prisoner, giving the name of Gordon Turner, 22, of Blackshear, Ga., said he and his gruesome burden were turned away from the doors of relatives in Blackshear and Waycross, Ga., and finally had to come here to carry out a last promise to his cousin, William, that his body would not be left to strangers.

"Here is your son," Mrs. E. W. Miller told police Gordon Turner said to her, "and he's dead. I promised him before he died that I would bring him to you. He was shot in a holdup yesterday."

Later Turner told police the holdup in which he and his cousin attempted to obtain a faster automobile than the one they were driving, occurred near Montgomery, Ala. He said William was shot by the driver.

Montgomery officers said they had no record of such a holdup.

The mission on which the two had set out, as related in a statement signed and sworn to by Gordon Turner, was as wild as his subsequent 36-hour ride with the body.

He said they had planned, at William's insistence, to try to effect the rescue of Louis Turner, William's brother, whom they believed to be headed by train from Tifton, Ga., to Kilby Prison, near Montgomery, Ala. He said they wanted the fast car to catch the train.

All the time they were planning the rescue, Louis remained in jail at Tifton, where Deputy Sheriff W. A. Ross said he was held, and the other two were wanted, for a hotel robbery.

Turning abruptly from Mrs. Miller's door here, Gordon Turner drove north. He collided with a highway patrol automobile and was arrested. His story followed.

CITIZEN FEDERATION RAPS CITY'S HEADS

Charges Congress Allowed to Think Taxpayers Are Resigned to Slash.

The District Commissioners and Auditor Daniel J. Donovan were roundly criticized last night in a resolution submitted by the committee on law and legislation and adopted enthusiastically by the Federation of Citizens Associations.

Concluding an exhaustive analytical criticism of the Budget Bureau's District appropriations bill, George E. Sullivan, chairman of the committee, read excerpts from the printed record on the executive hearing before the House committee to show that the Commissioners and Maj. Donovan agreed to the abrupt cessation of the hearings after admitting that they had been compelled to slash District estimates to $33,000,000 within six hours.

"Whereas, such recommendations misled various members of Congress into believing that the citizens and taxpayers generally had no desire to be heard in the matter before the House committee," the resolution read.

"And whereas, such demonstrated indifference on the part of the present District Commissioners and of the present District auditor to the inherent right of the people in a republic to make their needs, their wants and their wishes known to the public servants, constitutes an open challenge to every citizen of the District of Columbia and of every part of our great country.

"Now, therefore, be it resolved by the Federation of Citizens Associa-

La Paz, Bolivia, April 15 (A.P.).—An official communique tonight said that Bolivian forces had gained much ground from Paraguayan troops in the Fort Gondra sector in the Gran Chaco.

Mrs. Opal Hill's Son Cited in Fatal Crash

Kansas City, April 15 (A.P.).—Stuart Hill, 17, son of Mrs. Opal S. Hill, widely known golfer, was charged today with manslaughter and leaving the scene of an accident in a motor car collision last night which resulted in the death of Philip Thelen, 30.

Young Hill was arrested shortly before his mother returned home after an absence of almost three months, during which she participated in seven golf tournaments in the South.

Robbers Dynamite Vault of Brewery

Cold Spring, Minn., April 15 (A.P.). Robbers who dynamited the vault of the Cold Spring Brewing Co. early today stole $10,000 in negotiable bonds, "between $750,000 and $1,000,000" in nonnegotiable securities, $750 in revenue stamps and a small amount of cash.

President Ferdinand Peters of the firm said it was difficult to estimate the exact amount of the loot.

Officers said they were unable to find any traces of the raiders, who apparently fled in an automobile.

MACDONALD HOPEFUL ON SAILING FOR U.S.

Southampton, England, April 15 (A.P.).—Expressing the hope that new ways would be found for cooperation in the great task of freeing the world from its distress, Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald sailed today for his economic discussions with President Roosevelt in Washington.

Just before the Berengaria steamed out of the harbor, Mr. MacDonald received messages of good wishes from King George and from the American President.

"On your departure for Washington," the king's message said, "you know that my best wishes go with you for the success of your mission. I trust you will have a pleasant journey and a happy return."

President Roosevelt cabled: "We are greatly looking forward to your being with us and wish you a good voyage."

In response to the king's message Mr. MacDonald said: "I am much encouraged by your majesty's gracious message and send my grateful thanks," and to President Roosevelt he cabled: "Thank you very much for your cable. Leaving in wonderful weather which I take as a good omen."

The prime minister hopes to engage in a candid discussion of the war debts while in Washington, but he does not expect to come back home with a moratorium on the British payment due June 15.

He considers the prime purpose of his mission to be to lay the groundwork for the forthcoming world economic conference in London.

"I am looking forward to having

KIDNAPERS HOLD SON OF FACTOR; $100,000 ASKED

Jake the Barber Leaves to Negotiate for Release of Boy, 19.

GOOD TREATMENT, YOUTH TELEPHONES

(Copyright, 1933, by the United Press.)

Chicago, April 15.—John (Jake the Barber) Factor left his room late tonight for an unannounced destination in or near Chicago to negotiate with representatives of the abductors who last Wednesday kidnaped his 19-year-old son, Jerome, holding him for ransom. The kidnaping was revealed today.

The former barber, who rose to riches through stock sales and may have to return to England to face charges of a $7,000,000 fraud, said he expected to be back "before so very long."

Factor said that the ransom demand printed with a pen on Manila paper was received by his mother, grandmother of the victim, who was alone in a suite the broker maintained in the Pearson Hotel on the Gold Coast. That was yesterday.

Text of Kidnap Note.

It read:

"Mr. Jacob Factor: If you want your son Jerome home you will do as you are told. Get $50,000 in old money and small denominations. Have it ready on short notice. Do not notify the police or we will send him home in pieces. Be sure to follow instructions on a minute's notice. Do you want your son or your money?"

Factor said just before leaving for his rendezvous with underworld spokesmen for the kidnapers that the note and a telephone call from his son saying he was being treated well, pleaded that the ransom be paid formed his only contact thus far with the extortionists.

Junior at Northwestern.

Jerome is one of three beneficiaries of a $1,000,000 trust fund his father established several years ago. Other beneficiaries are Mrs. Rella Factor, the present wife, and 4-year-old Alvin, their son.

The verdicts of guilty were returned by a jury last Wednesday.

The three were among the nine original defendants accused of murder and accessory to murder in connection with the slaying of Mrs. Lucinda Mills, 67, mother of John H. Mills, during a weird cult ritual last February.

Fishermen to Sail Potomac To Make Pleas to Congress

Weather-Beaten Skippers to Leave New England Port Next Week and Will Ask That Something Be Done to Save Industry.

Gloucester, Mass., April 15 (A.P.).—Manned by a crew of weather-beaten New England fishing skippers, the schooner Gertrude L. Thebaud will sail from this old port early next week for Washington to carry a plea to the President and Congress to save New England's oldest industry—her fisheries.

The Thebaud, still wearing her winter rig and scarred by the storms of a winter on the North Atlantic fishing banks, will sail up the Potomac, where no other New England fishing schooner ever before has gone, and her hook will be dropped almost in the Capitol's back yard. The crew of veteran skippers will go over the side and row ashore the dories which have seen years of service on the banks.

The skippers will be their own spokesmen. They will try to show the President and Congress that only immediate assistance can save the fishing industry from disaster. They will explain that a large part of the debt-burdened New England fleet already is tied up and that if conditions do not quickly improve a like fate awaits vessels now on the fishing grounds.

If additional duty can not be provided to bar huge quantities of Japanese and Canadian fish now reaching American markets, the skippers hope to obtain assurance, at least, that the present tariff will not be lowered. Reports reaching Gloucester that Canada was prepared to trade other concessions for lifting of the duty on fish has brought apprehension to Gloucester. The captains also hope that the Nation may be willing to extend the assistance given farmers to the fisheries.

D. C. FUNDS BOOST NOW SEEN LIKELY

Calvert Street Bridge and Woodrow Wilson School Are Possible.

Certain limited increases in the District appropriations bill, a moderate boost in the Federal lump-sum contribution and a general liberalization of the House version of the measure appeared certain last night as the Senate District Appropriations subcommittee made ready to conclude deliberations tomorrow.

Construction items were viewed as having the best chance of restoration, becuse of their close tie-up with the local relief situation. Of these, Calvert Street Bridge is looked on with most favor by the subcommittee, while the new Woodrow Wilson High School has strong Senate support.

Senator Elmer Thomas (Democrat), Oklahoma, chairman of the subcommittee, stated unequivocally last night that he favors a number of justifiable increases over the House bill.

It is known that Senator Royal S. Copeland (Democrat), New York, influential member of the subcommittee, will wage a vigorous fight for a substantial increase in the lump sum, and for restoration of many items, particularly those affecting schools and public health.

"Substantial justice demands that items be adjusted and increased within reasonable limits," Senator Thomas said yesterday, nevertheless pointing

EASTER SPIRIT TODAY RULING CHRISTENDOM

FASHION PROMENADE IS SET FOR AVENUES

Two Sunrise Services, Rites at Cathedral and Monastery on Solemn Program.

Faith and fashion today renew themselves in Christendom as church and cathedral issue sounds of triumphant music signaling the observance of the Resurrection and Milady steps forth to promenade in new gown and hat.

Prophesied rainfall threatens the brilliance of the fashion promenade and outdoor sunrise services, but throughout the day and evening the triumphant feeling that Christ has arisen again will fill religious edifices whatever the weather.

A great throng, possibly an unprecedented one, began filling the city yesterday, though the Capital's cherry blossom spectacle—a magnetic Easter attraction—has diminished considerably.

Two Sunrise Services.

Two sunrise services will inaugurate Easter rites. At Arlington National Cemetery, the Knights Templars will conduct ceremonies with a heavy attendance expected, and the Gray Ladies' annual sunrise service at Walter Reed Hospital in the garden ampitheater will be held.

At Walter Reed the service will be open air unless the weather is inclement. In the latter event the new auditorium of the Army Medical School will house the services. A program of sacred music will be rendered by the Army Band. Mass will be held, after the music program, in the Memorial Chapel.

The service at Walter Reed will be conducted by Chaplain Frank L. Miller, whose sermon topic will be "The Joy of Easter." Chaplain Joseph R. Koch will say mass in the chapel with Sergt. E. Coffey as master of ceremonies.

Transportation Facilities.

Both the ampitheater service at Walter Reed and the Knights Templar rites at Arlington will begin at 7:30 a. m. Street car and motor bus companies have promised special facilities.

"False Alarm" Is False and Blaze in Senator King's Office Is Quenched.

A reported false fire alarm in the Senate Office Building late last night proved false itself when a small blaze was discovered in office 349, occupied by Senator William H. King, of Utah.

Capitol police reported to Metropolitan police that someone reported a fire in the Senate Office Building. As a precautionary move, Metropolitan police reported the fire to the fire department. An engine company and a truck responded, and found the desk of Senator King blazing.

It is believed the fire was caused by a short circuit in the desk light. Most of the papers on the desk, comprised principally of correspondence, were burned.

JAMES BIGGS NAMED SOLICITOR GENERAL

Carolinian Picked; Collier, of California, Heads Indian Bureau.

(Associated Press.)

Two important posts in the national Government—solicitor general of the United States and commissioner of Indian affairs—were filled yesterday by President Roosevelt in the administration's drive to bring an early ending of its patronage worries.

The President sent to the Senate the nomination of James Crawford Biggs, of North Carolina, to represent the Government in cases before the Supreme Court and the name of John Collier, of California, to manage the Nation's Indian wards.

At the same time he nominated James A. Donohoe to be Federal judge for Nebraska, Clifton Mathews to be Federal attorney for Arizona, and Rear Admiral Christian J. Peoples, now stationed at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, to be paymaster general of the Navy.

In addition, he formally withdrew the nomination of Mayor James M. Curley, of Boston, to be Ambassador to Poland. Curley had declined the appointment, saying he thought he could be of greater service to Boston and the Nation by remaining in this country.

Meanwhile, the name of Guy T. Helvering, a former representative from Kansas, was mentioned widely Robinson Intends To Force Vote Tomorrow.

OTHER BILLS ARE TIED UP

House to Act on Arms Embargo; Idleness in Prospect.

By ROBERT C. ALBRIGHT.

Moving under the burden of the most extensive program ever laid before a Congress, House and Senate leaders yesterday were combating the first evidences of delay, manifest last week in a general slowing down of legislative processes.

With six major pieces of legislation tied up in committee, the House was faced with the almost certain prospect of having nothing whatsoever before it when the arms embargo bill is disposed of tomorrow.

On the other side of the Capitol, the Senate yesterday was far from a vote on the farm relief bill, after a week of labored discussion. To complicate the situation further, a motion to reconsider the vote on the Black 30-hour week bill remained undisposed of.

Sees Nothing Untoward.

While expressing disappointment over progress on the farm measure, Senate Democratic Leader Joseph T. Robinson said he saw nothing untoward in the situation and anticipates more expedition on other measures awaiting action. He said he had anticipated some trouble with the farm bill.

In three pending proposals, however, there are the seeds of further delay. They are the Glass banking bill, now in a Senate Banking and Currency subcommittee; proposed railroad and stock exchange legislation, expected soon from the White House.

Meanwhile, Senator Robinson plans definitely to do something about the Senate inaction. Yesterday he served notice he will move as a last resort tomorrow to table the Trammell motion for reconsideration of the 30-hour week bill and thus force a vote on the issue. He hopes a vote will be reached on the farm bill by Wednesday.

Urges More Speed.

House Democratic Leader Joseph W. Byrns yesterday facetiously told newspapermen: "If we don't speed up we will be here until August 1." He added he had every reason to believe committees will expedite action and adjournment can be had by June 1.

An effort will be made to get the gasoline tax bill out of the Ways and Means Committee and before the House by Tuesday or Wednesday, Mr. Byrns indicated. He believes a re-

VOTE ON INFLATION DELAYED IN SENATE

(Associated Press.)

A tide of oratory in the Senate yesterday postponed until this week the first test vote on currency inflation to aid the farmer, after Democratic leaders had been thwarted in an effort to stem the flow of debate on the Roosevelt-sponsored agricultural relief program.

General discussion of the administration bill and its provisions for refloating mortgages and lifting farm income to prewar levels, effectively forestalled the opening of debate on pending proposals to add remonetization of silver to the bill as a rider.

Late in the day, after Republican attacks on the White House program—led by Senators Hebert, of Rhode Island, and Austin, of Vermont—had delayed the opening shots of inflation advocates, sponsors of silver rehabilitation plans decided to initiate their drive this week. Senator Long (Democrat), Louisiana, assuming for himself the role of floor leader for the expansion bloc, saw that few senators were present when the chance finally came for Senator Wheeler (Democrat), Montana, to speak on his bill for free coinage of silver at 16 to 1.

Wheeler May Speak Tomorrow.

He announced forthwith:

"I am not anxious to have the senator from Montana speak to this very light membership on the floor now."

He suggested, while Wheeler and Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, the Democratic leader, agreed, that consideration of the silver plan go over until this week, with Wheeler planning to open up tomorrow.

Shortly after the Senate convened, some Democratic chieftains saw the beginning of a filibuster and moved to cut debate and speed the bill through to certain approval. The measure now is a half-week behind its original schedule, which called for passage three days ago.

Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, the Democratic leader, asked that the Senate agree that beginning tomorrow no senator could speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes on the bill or any amendment offered to it.

Long Blocks Procedure.

Senator Long (Democrat), Louisiana, one of the inflation bloc, announced he would object unless Robinson changed his request to exempt from the curtailment Senator Thomas (Democrat), Oklahoma, and an amendment planned by Thomas to give President Roosevelt authority to inflate the currency.

Robinson promptly refused. Senator McNary, of Oregon, the Republican leader, immediately echoed Long's objection, which, under Senate rules, automatically blocked the agreement since unanimous consent is required.

McNary contended the bill had hardly been touched in the discussions thus far and that a 15-minute speech did not allow sufficient time for Republicans and their proposed substitute, which seeks to divest Secretary Wallace of the far-flung powers sought for him.

This parliamentary jousting out of the way, Senator Trammell (Democrat), Florida, held the floor for a while to argue his motion to reconsider the Black five-day week bill, after which Hebert got up to attack the farm plan.

Hebert's Charge of Graft.

Wheeler, who had sat by during the two hours and more it took to dispose of these matters, left his desk, while Hebert went on with his speech, in which he contended President Roosevelt had not submitted a "definite" farm program, as he promised in his campaign, but proposed a plan that he can not guarantee "is workable."

The bill, Hebert said, confers "the most sweeping dictatorial powers ever conferred upon any official in the United States, not even excepting the President," and would build up a political machine that could be swayed by favoritism to control farm States.

Its possibilities for "graft are greater and easier than anything which disgraced the prohibition enforcement unit," Hebert said, adding that it violated all "principles of equitable taxation" through the proposed processing tax and would work a hardship on the consumer by raising prices.

Many Cities' Plans To Reorganize Told

Hall and Kiplinger in Joint Discussion Over Radio on Governments.

Thousands of big and little cities, villages, counties, townships and other local districts are planning widespread reorganization of their governments, Arnold Bennett Hall, director of the Institute for Government Research of the Brookings Institution, declared last night.

In a joint discussion with W. M. Kiplinger over the radio, Mr. Hall declared that many of the political subdivisions were "smack up against inability to meet their obligations. They are going to reorganize. They are going to do it on a wide scale during the next few months * * *"

Mr. Kiplinger contended that the need for reorganization of the governmental set-ups was vital, but said he thought the more important problem facing the American people today is to obtain competent persons to do the job of running local governments.

Habits Held More Easily Formed by Older Persons

Greatest Spurt in Improvement in Learning Comes at About Ages of 13 and 14 Years, Dr. Langhorne, of Emory, Reports.

(Associated Press.)

New facts about habit-forming, tending to show that new habits are acquired more easily by a person who already has many old established habits as background, yesterday were reported to the Southern Society for Philosophy and Psychology.

Dr. Maurice C. Langhorne, of Emory University, said a group of high school pupils tested at Atlanta, Ga., learned better than first graders for this reason. He drew the conclusion from standard tests of the learning ability of 78 boys and girls from 7 to 17.

He found older children became more skillful than younger ones with the same amount of practice on a given task, and acquired their skill more speedily. The amount and rate of improvement increased directly from the youngest children to the oldest.

The greatest spurt in improvement in learning came about the ages of 13 to 14 years, he reported. Among younger children improvement was much slowed and they did not learn so readily. Boys became more skillful than girls with the same practice and acquired their skill faster.

Dr. Langhorne said the tests confirm a theory held by psychologists that if a skilled act or habit is formed by reorganization of older habits, then older people with a fuller complement of habits should acquire skill more rapidly.

There are definite bodily differences between people who are "fast" and "slow" in their reactions, reported Dr. Lyle H. Lanier, of Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn.

He tried out 35 college students for their speed of reaction in psychological tests such as tapping, marking lines and naming colors, and picked the five fastest and five slowest of the group. The fast men he found had higher blood pressure, higher basal metabolism or heat production, and faster pulse rate. The slow men, on the other hand, had the fastest breathing rate.

Tests showing there is no foundation for a widespread belief that newborn infants can not distinguish between objects that they see for several weeks after birth were described by W. C. Beasley, of John's Hopkins University, Baltimore. Among 250 babies he found all could discriminate among objects they saw by the tenth day of their lives, and most of them did so sooner.

D. C. FOREST CORPS ORDERED TO LURAY

Although their conditioning training is still incomplete, about 200 Washington men are expected to be sent tomorrow to the first of the reforestation camps, to be established near Luray, Va.

The organization at this camp and the men themselves will be a model for all other units to be set up over the country. In order to have this model available, the Washington contingent will be moved ahead of Army training schedule.

As the men move out tomorrow, they will be equipped with the regular mess kits, blankets, cots, clothing and toilet articles. Nonperishable rations for ten days will be taken, perishable food being bought in the field. The contingent will be commanded by Capt. Leo Donovan of the Twelfth Infantry, assisted by Second Lieuts. Richard B. Camant and William F. Train.

The camp will be set up on Passage Creek, six miles west of Luray. It is possible that Mrs. Roosevelt and Washington officials may be present at the opening of the camp or may visit it during the week.

It also was learned yesterday that while no national forest camps will be set up in Maryland, some of the reforestation army will work on Maryland forest preserves.

Early Action Seen On Home Debt Aid

Bulkley Says Committee Will Start Study of Bill Tomorrow.

(Associated Press.)

Early congressional action on President Roosevelt's program for aiding debt-burdened small home owners was assured yesterday when Senator Bulkley (Democrat), Ohio, announced the Senate banking subcommittee he heads would begin consideration of it tomorrow.

At the same time a movement was launched to broaden the scope of the proposal to include homes valued up to $20,000, instead of limiting it to property valued at $10,000 or less.

Bulkley said his subcommittee would meet tomorrow to decide what procedure to follow in consideration of the bill. He predicted brief hearings would be held, although he was not yet ready to announce who would be called.

The subcommittee was orignially set up to study the Borah bill to abolish the home loan bank system, but the President's measure would make this system permanent and enlarge it.

LENIENCY IS SHOWN IN BEER RAID TOTALS

(Associated Press.)

The leniency which Attorney General Cummings suggested had been shown recently toward beer violators of the prohibition laws was evident in the March report of the Prohibition Bureau.

Seizures of breweries totaled 118 during the month as compared with 143 in February and 1,679 in March of last year. A similar decline in the seizure of beer itself was shown, with a fall to 66,412 gallons in March from 126,868 the preceding month and 172,269 in March, 1932.

State and Federal agents together grabbed 157,682 gallons of spirits during March, as compared with 114,323 in February, and 156,131 in March of last year; 24,774 gallons of wine against 14,934 and 47,877.

Cases placed on the docket during the month by State and Federal officers totaled 7,142 against 5,624 in February and 7,630 in March of last year; average prison sentences, 153 days against 122 and 184; average fine, $105 against $139 and $176.

Use of padlock proceedings also declined, with 438 permanent injunctions being granted against 765 and 810.

Antiwar Profits Bill Is Introduced

Vandenberg Acts for Senate Membership of Policies Group.

(Associated Press.)

Recommendations of the War Policies Commission for taking the profit out of war yesterday were reintroduced in the Senate by Senator Vandenburg (Republican), Michigan, on behalf of the senatorial members of that body.

Vandenburg reintroduced the resolution placed before the last Congress with the commission's recommendation, proposing a constitutional amendment to permit Congress to fix prices in time of war. He also introduced a bill to permit the President in time of conflict to shift Government bureaus and create new agencies for the more efficient conduct of the war.

The legislation was introduced by Vandenberg on behalf of Senators Reed (Republican), Pennsylvania, and Robinson (Democrat), Arkansas, and himself, all members of the commission which made a long study of suggestions for eliminating profit in war.

NORTH CAROLINIAN NAMED TO SOLICITOR GENERAL POST

It was said authoritatively, however, that a decision is not expected for at least a week and that there are several other candidates, including Robert Gore, of Chicago and Florida.

This is considered one of the most important positions in the Government, since the commissioner is charged with directing all the tax collecting agencies.

A number of senators were known to have been opposed to the nomination of Collier, but administration supporters were confident he would be confirmed easily. Senator McAdoo (Democrat), California, told newspapermen Collier was not his candidate, but he had no idea of opposing confirmation.

Secretary Ickes, who is in charge of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, described the nominee as "the best equipped man who has ever occupied that office."

Ickes Backed Collier.

Ickes had a great deal to do with the selection of Collier, who is executive secretary of the American Indian Defense Association. While in that position he engaged in almost constant tilts with the officials handling Indian affairs, including Ray Lyman Wilbur, who was Herbert Hoover's Secretary of Interior.

Both Chairman Wheeler, of the Senate Indian Committee, and Senator Frazier, of North Dakota, the ranking Republican member, announced their support of Collier.

The nomination of Biggs came as a surprise to a number of persons on Capitol Hill, who had understood that Felix Frankfurter, dean of the Harvard Law School, was to be named. Others said, however, that Frankfurter turned down the post.

For the last fifteen years Biggs has been practicing law at Raleigh, N. C. Previously he was a member of the North Carolina Superior Court. He also is a former chairman of the State Board of Elections.

Biggs Was U. S. Counsel.

Biggs already has prosecuted cases in the Supreme Court. As Government counsel in 1919 he carried to it a case against the Southern Pacific Co. arising out of claims to land in Elk Hills, Calif., and won a judgment of great value to the Government because of the oil involved.

During the day support was indicated in some quarters for Harry Mitchell, of Great Falls, Mont., as an Assistant Secretary of the Interior. He had been among those urged for Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Reuben Perry, of Albuquerque, also has been mentioned in speculation for Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

In the last few days, Postmaster General Farley, the administration's patronage dispenser, has been conferring with department heads and going over the lists of those recommended for positions. Considerable progress has been made in reaching decisions.

The administration also plans within a few days to start nominating postmasters. Considerable pressure has been brought to bear from House members for this action. There are approximately 2,500 vacancies.

ROOSEVELT POWER PLAN AIM REVEALED

House Group Told He Seeks to Force Water Out of Southern Stocks.

(Associated Press.)

A declaration that President Roosevelt wants the Tennessee Valley development bill so framed that it will force some Southern power companies to take "water out of their stocks" late yesterday climaxed the House Military Affairs Committee's public study of the measure.

On that note the hearing ended and in executive session early this week, said Chairman McSwain, the committee will consider amendments to get it ready for House action Tuesday or Wednesday.

The prediction as to what President Roosevelt hopes to see was made by Judson King, of the National Popular Government League, a close friend of Senator Norris (Republican), Nebraska, who long has been an advocate of Government operation of the Muscle Shoals power plant.

King testified that last July he talked with the President—then the Democratic nominee—and was told he could "rest assured" that Mr. Roosevelt's attitude toward transmission of publicly-produced power had not changed.

Chamber Fights Plan.

As governor, King recalled, Mr. Roosevelt demanded that the stock of transmission companies be reduced to actual cost.

"And I know, gentlemen," King went on, "that if these companies are willing to strip the cost of their transmission lines of all water and wind, the President will be willing to let them have the power."

As King was making this forecast, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States gave out a letter President Henry I. Harriman sent to all its members insisting that "the duplication of public service facilities is uneconomical and must ultimately result in added cost to consumers." Harriman said:

"The private properties that now are serving the public in the region of Muscle Shoals were built, and are now being operated, under public regulation. These would be destroyed by Government competition."

Vast Expense Envisioned.

He considered the Tennessee Basin project envisioned in the McSwain bill would entail an ultimate Federal expenditure of $1,250,000,000, and would launch "the Government permanently into the business of generating and distributing electric power."

"The current problem of Federal finance makes this a peculiarly appropriate time for the Congress to provide for the disposal or lease of the entire Muscle Shoals development. However, in case this should not be the will of Congress, it would seem only fair and reasonable that industries already established and which have long been engaged in the development of the Muscle Shoals region are entitled to an opportunity to cooperate with the Federal Government * * * rather than be faced with Federal competition * * * on a basis which no enterprise can meet."

Discussing this same phase of the question, and earlier assertions that $400,000,000 worth of securities would be made "worthless" by Government operation of the Shoals plant, Senator Bone (Democrat), Washington, told the committee that "these securities soon will be worthless anyhow."

"Wind and Water" Values.

"These utility companies can't continue to pay dividends on such fictitious values as wind and water," Bone said. "It makes no difference whether we go through with this Muscle Shoals bill or not—the investors are going to lose anyhow."

Bone testified, too, that if the Muscle Shoals plant under Federal operation produced power as cheaply as does the municipal establishment in Tacoma, Wash., "it will be the cheapest power in the world."

He added that "There is no such thing as governmental regulation of power companies."

"The minute we try to regulate," he said, "the power companies go in to regulate the regulators—and they succeed, too."

Bone charged that private companies "evade taxes" through the influence they have upon officials who fix valuations."

Several years ago, he asserted, private operators of public utilities said they were paying taxes on $300,000,000 of investments in Washington, yet a check up showed the actual taxes paid represented only an investment of $9,000,000.

Treasury Heads Admit Plans to Export Gold

(Associated Press.)

Treasury officials disclosed yesterday that licenses had been granted for two shipments of gold to be sent to France.

The recommendation that the shipments be made was forwarded by the New York Federal Reserve Bank here and approved, but the Treasury declined to say the exact destination of the gold or to give the amounts.

port on the Muscle Shoals bill by the House Military Affairs Committee will follow shortly.

The Ways and Means measure will extend for one or two years the present 1-cent a gallon Federal tax on gasoline. It probably will permit a reduction of from 3 to 2 cents on stamps for local letters, with authority for reductions on other classes of mail if the situation warrants.

Bills Still Tied Up.

House bills still tied up in committee include the Lewis-Wagner $500,000,000 relief bill which passed the Senate, and the $2,000,000,000 small home loan refinancing bill, back before the House Banking Committee; the securities bill, before the House Interstate Commerce Committee, and the 30-hour week bill, before the House Labor Committee.

Revised budget estimates on the independent officers bill, slated for completion last week, are expected tomorrow and House deficiences appropriations subcommittee will go immediately to work on them.

Chairman William P. Connery, jr., of the House Labor Committee, has temporarily suspended hearings on the 30-hour week bill until the Senate acts on the Trammell motion to reconsider the Senate vote.

Due for Alterations.

If approved again by the Senate, the measure is expected to be extensively altered by the House Committee, which has a number of amendments submitted by Secretary of Labor Perkins. They are reputed to propose a more flexible limitation on hours of work, and a minimum wage provision.

Senator Hugo L. Black (Democrat), Alabama, Senate author of the measure, said yesterday he is in accord with Miss Perkins as to amendments proposed. Representative Connery, however, wants an amendment added to apply provisions of the bill to foreign products. A similar amendment was put forward in the Senate and voted down, but the Trammell motion to reconsider will force another vote on that issue.

Measures still tied up in Senate committees include the Glass banking bill, the securities bill, the home mortgage bill and the farm mortgage bill. Added to the list will be proposed legislation expected from the White House dealing with the railroad, public works, tariff and stock exchange questions.

America Not to Intervene In Cuban Political Dispute

By HAROLD J. T. HORAN.

The United States intends to maintain its present relations with the government of President Machado on exactly the same plane as with other governments, it became known on the highest authority here last night.

The likelihood of interfering with the Cuban administration at this time, or at any other time, is regarded here as remote as American intervention in any other sovereign state. There is no occasion at this time to consider the application of the Platt amendment, and although efforts have been made by revolutionary sources to provoke intervention, there is no disposition to intermeddle in Cuba.

President Roosevelt, however, is anxious to have an American Ambassador in Havana as soon as possible. For this purpose, he is reviewing the panel of names submitted to him.

Among those under consideration are Francis White, the present Assistant Secretary of State in charge of Latin American affairs, and John Cudahy, of Milwaukee. Mr. White's nomination is being actively indorsed by George Rublee, in charge of the Morgan interests here.

Mr. Cudahy is a millionaire sportsman, and speaks Spanish fluently. He thus satisfies the President's requirement of liquistically trained American diplomats for foreign posts.

Secretary Hull is well aware of the intrigues that are on foot to bring about American intervention in Cuba. There is no disposition on the part of the Department of State to deprecate the stability of the Machado government. The fundamental basis of the internal opposition to the Government in Cuba is primarily the cause of most political unrest since the war economic distress.

One reason why the President is anxious to have an American Ambassador assume his functions in Havana is the necessary preparation for the exchange of views between the Cuban Government and the Department of State, which may succeed in removing some of the tariff burdens that now oppress Cuban-American trade. The steady decline in the price of sugar has been augmented by the American tariff rate, which brought economic ruin to the majority of the Cuban sugar planters and seriously strained the American banks that were holding their notes.

A discussion of views between the Secretary of State and Ambassador Cintas here can be very materially aided by coordinate discussions in Havana between President Machado and the Ambassador of the United States. The reputed political assassinations in Havana have not yet been reported to the Department of State and there was no confirmation of the alleged shooting of two students by the Cuban police.

The Cuban Ambassador, Oscar Cintas, since his arrival here has been preparing the subjects of discussions between the Secretary of State and himself which will be conducted at the same time that the White House conversations with the European statesmen are going on.

The invitations forwarded by the President to the three powers of Latin America—Chile, Brazil and Argentina—have created a very friendly feeling toward the new administration on the part of the countries of South and Central America. It has not yet been determined who will be the delegates from Buenos Aires to the discussions here, but advices have been received announcing the appointment of Beniamino Cohen, charge d'affaires of Chile, to act for his government, and Ambassador Lima e Silva, who will act for Brazil.

ARLINGTON TAX RATE IS SLASHED 25 CENTS

Board Fixes Levy at $2.20; Total Budget Is Placed at $871,487.

The tax rate for Arlington County as fixed by the county board at its meeting yesterday at the courthouse is $2.20, effective July 1, instead of $2.45 for last year, a reduction of 25 cents on the $100 assessed valuation.

The rate is divided as follows, for general county purposes, $1.15; for schools, $1.05 a reduction of 20 cents and 5 cents, respectively.

The total budget, which as based on an assessed valuation of all real estate in the country of $26,000,000, is $871,487 as against $1,054,086 for last year.

The budget provides for general county purposes, $398,936; for schools, $331,908, and for the water department, $140,645.

The tentative budget as originally submitted by County Manager Roy S. Braden carried a total of $1,015,414. Of the total difference of $143,927 as eliminated by the board there is an item of $103,684 in the school budget, with the remainder of $40,243, the amount saved by the county board, for general purposes.

The $1.05 rate for schools does not provide the $10,000 asked for by the school board for additional operating expenses.

Chairman Harry A. Fellows announced that the board, at an adjourned meeting to be held on April 24, will determine the levy for that section of East Falls Church lying within the limits of Arlington County.

Rockne Again Hits Olson's Relief Plan

Minnesota Senator Attacks Governor's Fund Use in Letter.

St. Paul, April 15 (A.P.).—The dispute between Gov. Floyd B. Olson and Senator A. J. Rockne over relief measures continued today with a letter in which the latter criticized the executive's part in distribution of State funds to the needy.

Concerning an accusation the State Senate finance committee, of which he is chairman, had held up relief appropriations, Mr. Rockne said that about $1,200,000 of the $1,500,000 received by Minnesota from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation had gone to the three largest cities and their counties. Mr. Rockne, a Republican, reiterated his opinion that existing laws were broad enough to permit all relief necessary. The governor, a Farmer-Laborite, contended they were not.

The controversy arose with the governor's declaration he would declare martial law unless adequate relief measures were passed. Mr. Rockne then accused him of playing politics, a charge the governor denied.

SEIZURE OF 5 SEEN SOLVING ROBBERIES

Three of Prisoners Taken After Wild Chase Beginning in Bethesda.

As a result of the capture of five persons yesterday by Montgomery County police, Washington police are seeking to solve a number of recent holdups and robberies in the District. Three of the five were arrested in the District after a spectacular chase on Wisconsin avenue, from Bethesda to just inside the District line. The other two are being held at the Rockville Jail.

Montgomery County Policemen Webb Hersperger and Frank Soper, of the Bethesda Substation, became suspicious of a parked car in which a couple was seated on Wisconsin avenue, at Walsh street, Bethesda, and arrested the couple for investigation about 3 a. m. They gave their names as Joseph O'Donnell, Thirtieth street and Alabama avenue southeast; and Marie O'Malley, 15, of Lorton, Va.

The policemen, cruising around, then came upon a second car in the alley behind the Leland Pharmacy. Two men jumped into the car and it sped away at the approach of the policemen, who gave chase. At a speed of from 65 to 70 miles an hour, the chase continued for nearly 3 miles. Policeman Soper emptied both his own and Policeman Hersperger's revolvers at the fugitive car and succeeded in striking a tire on a rear wheel.

Forced to Run on Rim.

Despite the flat tire, the fugitives continued until several blocks inside the District line the tire came off and they were forced to run on the rim. They veered to the side into a vacant lot in the rear of the Tolman Laundry and started across a muddy field. The policemen, augmented by Policemen A. G. Keene and G. D. Wyant, of the Eighth Precinct, continued the chase until the fugitive car crashed into a mudbank. One of the men in the car threw away a .32 automatic pistol just before the policemen arrived.

Policeman Hersperger ran up to the men, waving his pistol, which he later discovered was empty. Two men who gave their names as Charles L. Sullivan, 22, of Lorton, Va., and Frank G. Hudson, 19, 485 E street southwest, who is said by police to have had a .38-caliber revolver in his possession, were captured. A red-haired woman in the car said she was Mrs. Irma Louise Sullivan, 22, wife of Sullivan, and also of Lorton.

Held for Questioning.

The Washington police took the three to the Eighth Precinct Station, where they are being held for questioning in connection with the holdup of the All States Hotel early yesterday. They also are investigating in an effort to connect the three with a series of holdups and robberies in the District.

When police went to Lorton, Va., to arrest James O'Malley, father of the O'Malley girl, with whom the Sullivans lived, they found he already had been arrested by Virginia authorities on liquor charges.

Montgomery County police want the quintet on suspicion of having been connected with the attempted robbery of the Peoples Drug Store in Bethesda and the Leland Pharmacy yesterday and for questioning in connection with the recent robbery of the same Peoples store when 18 cases of prescription liquor were stolen.

Will Serve Beer, Mrs. Owen States

New Minister to Denmark Doesn't Think, However, It's Important.

Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen will serve beer in the U. S. Legation in Copenhagen, but she doesn't think it's very important whether she does or not, she said yesterday at the White House in response to questions.

The new Minister to Denmark, first woman to occupy a major diplomatic post, said, "Yes, I'll serve it because it's all right by the laws of my country and the custom of the country to which I'm going. But I don't think it's important—there are so many more interesting things in Denmark."

She will study particularly Denmark's cooperative movement and the reason for the low illiteracy and infant mortality rates, she said. Mrs. Owen plans to sail on the S. S. George Washington on May 10.

FATHER OF 2 SLAIN IN CUBA LOSES JOB

Others Reported Slain, but Strict Police Censors Hide Details.

Havana, April 15 (A.P.).—J. M. Valdes Leon, whose two sons were killed by the police yesterday, was ousted today from the post of general paymaster of the Cuban treasury, a position he had held for many years.

The news was broken to him at Principe Prison, where he was taken yesterday after his sons had been slain. The police said they killed the two young men because they suspected them of being involved in the wave of antigovernment terrorism which has swept Havana in the last few days.

There were reports that the father had committed suicide in his cell, but Lieut. Ambrosio Diaz Galup, supervisor of the prison, said he still was alive.

Police, hospitals, the morgue and other possible sources of information refused to say anything about numerous rumors to the effect that other young Cubans, arrested on suspicion of connection with the series of bombings, had been slain.

Raimundo and Alberto Leon Dauasa, 25 and 23, the sons of the ousted government paymaster, were killed in the exclusive Vedado section of Havana after they had been arrested in their home. They had been turned over to plain clothes police and three hours later the shooting occurred almost within the shadow of Principe Prison. The two victims, one dead and one dying, were found by uniformed police.

tions that it hereby expresses its righteous indignation and that of the citizens and taxpayers generally of the District against the heretofore recited attitude of the present District Commissioners and of the present District auditor, showing them to be unmindful of the inherent rights of the people and of their own status as public servants only."

Copies were ordered sent to President Roosevelt, along with the Senate and House District Committees and the Commissioners.

Edwin S. Hege and Marvin M. McLean attempted to come to the defense of the District officials and to suggest that they were merely working under orders of Budget Director Douglas, but they were practically shouted down by delegates bent on chastising the Commissioners and the auditor.

At the previous meeting the federation severely criticized the House subcommittee on appropriations for refusing to grant the citizens a hearing.

Upon motion of Miss Etta Taggart, chairman of the committee on national representation, the federation reaffirmed its stand for suffrage in the District by indorsing a pending Senate bill proposing an amendment to the Constitution to provide national representation to the District.

At the same time the resolution opposed a House bill which would authorize the District Commissioners to select a delegate to Congress.

Maj. Clayton E. Emig, chairman of the committee on city planning, proposed that the new Union Square be named L'Enfant Square, only to be informed that there is such a square already in Washington. Another delegate suggested Ellicot Square, in honor of L'Enfant's associate, and it was pointed out that there is also such a square in existence. The whole matter was then dropped.

Rabbit-Breeding Firm Is Barred From Mails

(Associated Press.)

On Easter eve, the Postoffice Department yesterday barred use of the mails to a rabbit-breeding company.

An order signed by Postmaster General Farley held that Eastern Rabbitry, Eastern Rabbitries, Inc., of New Freedom, Pa., had engaged in a scheme for obtaining money through the mails by "false and fraudulent" claims. The company was said to have failed to keep promises to buy back from its customers all the rabbits they raised.

DANIELS IS GUARDED CLOSELY ON ARRIVAL

Officials Extend Welcome in Mexico City; Train Wreck Attempt Is Revealed.

Mexico City, April 15 (A.P.).—Josephus Daniels, the new American Ambassador, against whose appointment there have been protests because he was Secretary of the Navy at the time of the Vera Cruz operation, was heavily guarded when he arrived here today, and there was no untoward incident.

Shortly before his train pulled in police revealed that an attempt had been made to wreck it yesterday. A section of rail was removed near Morales, 50 miles north of Monterey.

Railroad police discovered the break and after it had been repaired the Ambassador's train proceeded very slowly, with men ahead scrutinizing the road bed.

More than 200 police and detectives were on duty at the railroad station when the ambassador arrived. He was welcomed by delegates from the American colony, including representatives of the staffs of the American Embassy and Consulate, and by Gen. Guillermo Palma, Mexico City's chief of police, who informed him that extraordinary precautions for his safety had been taken as a result of orders received by telephone from President Rodriguez in Guadalajara.

The half dozen blocks between the station and the embassy were lined with police, and there was a large guard at the embassy itself. At a newspaper interview the new ambassador said he did not care to discuss criticism of his appointment by Mexican students, Communists and others.

After remarking that the ban on liquor would continue at the embassy, Mr. Daniels defined his aims, as the representative of the United States, as follows:

"Closest association and cooperation would exist between the two republics. It is the common destiny of each to respect territorial and every other right. I will seek better understanding and cooperation in relations and in improvement of commerce and trade."

What Every Paint Buyer Should Know!

Is it not reasonable to suppose that a dealer, selling paint only, who has on his staff men of experience (some of whom have been engaged in the paint business for nearly 50 years), should be better equipped to advise you on your paint problems? The practical painter, the MAN WHO KNOWS WHAT HIS WANTS ARE . . . buys from the paint dealer!

We suggest that you, at your convenience, weigh a gallon of paint as prepared by the painter, and you will find that you have from 21 to 23 pounds to the gallon of painting material. No good paint SHOULD WEIGH LESS, in the opinion of the painter. We also suggest that a comparison of weight be made of paint using less than 100% Lead for its pigment. This test alone will not tell what is in the can, but it would be of considerable help in making a decision as to the paint you would care to use on your property. Paint can be loaded by a weight-given body, which lends nothing of value. This is a very good reason why you should buy your paint from a reliable paint house.

Good White Paint, as recommended and used by the Master Painters, has as its pigment 100% Lead. Where different shades are desired, enough pure coloring matter is used to produce the desired shade. The vehicle could not be improved upon, same being pure linseed oil, pure gum turpentine and the very best grade of Japan Dryer.

Paint troubles do not assert themselves at once. Bad conditions appear about the second or third repainting. This condition can only be cured by burning off the old paint . . . an expensive, dangerous operation. Avoid this condition by placing your painting problems before a Master Painter . . . or a dealer in whom you have confidence.

NEW ORLEANS WALL MENACED BY WAVES

High Tides and Gale Send Lake Waters Over Protective Masonry.

New Orleans, April 15 (A.P.).—Threateningly high tides which suddenly developed on Lake Pontchartrain today as a 35-mile wind swept the city, sent 5-foot waves dashing over the sea wall protecting the eastern sector of New Orleans, washed out a road leading to the Southern Yacht Club Building at West End and damaged railroad bridges across the southern end of the lake.

The odd windstorm, whipping the lake into a fury, developed under a brilliant sun which shone here today after a night of heavy rains.

Eastern train schedules were delayed. A morning train from Cincinnati and Birmingham came into the city 45 minutes late, as a result of a partial washout on a rail bridge approach.

Lake Pontchartrain rose rapidly in the wake of high winds and a 5-foot tide which did considerable damage to piers on the Mississippi gulf coast last night.

Chicago Reds Protest Scottsboro Conviction

Chicago, April 15 (U.P.).—A protest demonstration against the conviction of one of the Negro defendants in the Scottsboro assault trial was staged by Communists on the South Side today.

Approximately 3,000 marchers participated.

Irate Husband Kills Supporter of Wife

Maddened Man Then Ends His Own Life With Same Shotgun.

Vacaville, Calif., April 15 (A.P.).—After slaying Mrs. Will Poppin, 25, mother of six children, by riddling her with shotgun slugs at her ranch home near here, police today said Fred Caballero, 29, fled to Yolo and killed himself.

Caballero, officers reported, used the shotgun to commit suicide at the home of a friend, Louis Miller, by leaning on the barrel and sending a charge through his body.

The slaying and suicide last night, the official report said, climaxed a family quarrel. Caballero's wife, a sister-in-law of Mrs. Poppin, filed a divorce complaint against him here yesterday. Authorities said Mrs. Poppin had sided with the wife in the difficulties that led up to the divorce action.

MRS. JUDD PLEADS FOR SUICIDE CHANCE

Demands Husband Allow Her to Leap Out Window at Sanity Hearing.

Florence, Ariz., April 15 (A.P.).—Seized with hysteria, Winnie Ruth Judd, condemned slayer, demanded of her husband today that she be allowed to throw herself from the second story window of the courtroom where a hearing is in progress to determine whether she is insane.

The disturbance came in the absence of the jury which had been sent from the room during argument over the court's authority to grant an order for examination of Mrs. Judd by State psychiatrists without the presence of her attorneys.

Mrs. Judd alternated convulsive laughter with tears for several minutes before she was quieted.

"Let me throw myself out of that window," she said to Dr. William C. Judd, who was seated just in front of her. Her voice was not loud enough to carry across the courtroom and the argument of the counsel was not interrupted. Dr. Judd turned around quickly and held her hand in his while a matron soothed her. Sortly after she was calmed she whispered someting to her husband and then laughed.

As the court's day drew to a close, it became apparent that probably not more than one of th 40 witnesses subpenaed would be able to complete testimony today.

Flood of Prosperity Plans Received by Miss Perkins

Most of Schemes Come From "Forgotten Man" and Are Grouped Into Six Classes, From Socialism to Huge Public Works Program.

"The Forgotten Man," brought into politics in the last campaign, is taking his position seriously and suggesting plans for the relief of the country, according to Miss Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor.

Commenting on the administration's hopes to mobilize industry, Miss Perkins said that the "forgotten man" was responsible for many of the more than 2,000 plans submitted to her department. Signing himself as such, she said, he has sent in all varieties of schemes to stimulate reemployment.

"This is a good sign—it shows there is thinking in America now," Miss Perkins said. These plans are being studied, but so far no one scheme stands out as a favorite over the others, she added. All of them look to the ultimate restoration of every man to the industry in which he worked prior to the crash. This means that the "luxury trades," barber shops and beauty shops and boat building trades, must be restored, which can only be done when general prosperity is abroad in the land.

Six General Classes.

An unusual feature of the multitude of plans submitted is that all of them fall into about six general classes, Miss Perkins said. As she outlined the classes, they are:

1. Socialization of all industry—that is, the Government to take over and operate all forms of manufacture, transportation and distribution.

2. Some form of Government subsidy, loan or allowance to enable plants to reopen.

3. The establishment of boards temporarily to act as arbiter in various industries. These boards, similar to the War Industries Board, would limit the production of each industry, and allot shares of this amount to each plant. This plan has been put forward by a great number of serious persons, Miss Perkins said.

Variety of Public Works.

4. Settlement of urban populations on thinly settled lands with some form of industry nearby. By this means families can raise most of their food and live an outdoor, farm life, but still augment their farm income with a cash wage for part-time work in the industry. It would take many years to put such a scheme into operation, she pointed out.

5. An enormous program of a great variety of public works—possibly even greater than the $6,000,000,000 program proposed in some quarters already.

6. Plans for a barter system. These, while possibly practicable for small communities, of limited needs, would not satisfy a civilized people accustomed to the American standard of living, Miss Perkins said.

Junk Man Is Given $4,000 in Old Book

Hysterical Hoarder Seeking Itinerant Dealer She Handed Savings.

Chicago, April 15 (A.P.).—An ancient white steed drawing an ancient junk wagon with an ancient, bearded junk dealer holding the reins was hunted frantically today. In the heap of rubbish on that cart was a very valuable book. It contained $4,000 that Mrs. Valeryik Walszynska had hidden away.

"I was spring house cleaning," she said, almost hysterically. "A junkman paid me 10 cents for a lot of old books, magazines and bottles accumulated over the winter. Then I remembered I had put the money in one of those books several months ago."

Late in the day the woman and police were still looking for the junkman with the buried treasure in his day's pile.

Long Beach, Calif., April 15 (A.P.). The death of Mrs. Caroline F. Horne, 73, wealthy widow of a pioneer real estate developer, was caused by heart disease, Dr. Frank Webb, county autopsy surgeon, reported today.

Discovery of the body late yesterday in a fashionable apartment hotel here, a towel wrapped about the neck, caused authorities to believe Mrs. Horne might have been slain.

One-Page Biggers Will Gives Estate to Widow

Pasadena, Calif., April 15 (A.P.).—On one typewritten page, the will of Earl Derr Biggers, novelist and creator of "Charlie Chan," detective character, was filed here today, bequeathing the entire estate to the widow, Mrs. Eleanor Biggers.

No estimate was placed on the value of the estate, including real estate, money and "royalties, past and future." The will was drawn in June, 1924, while Biggers was living at Pelham Manor, N. Y.

GOULD ENTRY WINS HUNT FEATURE RACE

Ostend First in Middleburg Event; Crowd of 15,000 Is Present.

Special to The Washington Post.

Middleburg, Va., April 15.—Ostend, from the stables of Mrs. F. M. Gould, New York sportswoman, with W. Street riding, won the Middleburg Hunt Cup race, 4 miles across country, in the thirteenth annual renewal at the Glenwood race course on the D. C. Sands estate here today. R. K. Mellon's Comea, with James Ryan in the saddle, came in second, while Noel Laing rode William Almys' Career to third place after he had taken a tumble at the eighth jump from the last. He was running second when he fell.

Only four horses started in this race, four being scratched. Jack Skinner kept Mrs. Raymond Belmont's Grubstake in the lead until he fell at the fourth jump from the last. Skinner was not hurt. Ostend was shoving Grubstake close when the latter fell. For a short distance during the race Ostend and Career were running neck and neck in second place. When Grubstake fell, Ostend took the lead and easily kept it to the finish.

Fully 15,000 society and sporting folk were present from Washington, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and other sections of the East.

Roosevelt's Son Attends.

The President's son, James Roosevelt, motored up from Washington with Admiral Cary T. Grayson. Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, widow of the wartime President, also was here and was among a number of guests entertained at a luncheon at Benton given by Mrs. D. C. Sands and Miss Charlotte Noland preceding the races. Other guests included the judges and officials of the races. Mrs. Letitia Perkins entertained at tea following the races, when her guests included members of the Diplomatic Corps. Mrs. Oliver Iselin, jr., also entertained at a luncheon.

The Sunnybank, first race on the program, 1¼ miles over turf, was easily captured by the favorite, St. Francis, gray gelding from the stables of Mrs. T. W. Durant, Pittsburgh sportswoman, with J. W. Davis up. S. Veitch's Aries, ridden by R. C. Duffy, was second. Mrs. Somerville's March Step, with Noel Laing in the saddle, took the lead at the start and kept it for three-quarters of the distance, when from a bunched pack Davis forced his mount ahead, took the lead and easily kept it to the finish. Mrs. T. W. Durant's Free Wheeler was scratched.

Whitney Entries Victors.

In the William Skinner Memorial, 2½ miles over brush course, entries of Mrs. John Hay Whitney had the race to themselves with the exception of a riderless horse, Grenadier Guard, Somerville entry, who threw Noel Laing at the first jump and came in with the winners until he ran out of the course at the last jump. Mrs. Whitney's Rosy Covert, with H. W. Frost in the saddle, led the entire way with her Cawvoge, ridden by R. McKinney, a close second. Alvin Untermeyer's Drapeau, with R. C. Duffy riding, came in third.

There were spills aplenty in the Rose Hill race, three miles across country, five horses going down in this race. Last Call, owned by Mrs. Lewis Parke, broke his back when he fell at the last jump and was ordered to be killed. His rider, Jimmy Ryan, was unhurt save for a few bruises. Other horses that fell were Mrs. Allen Potts' Red Wing, Mrs. Raymond Belmont's Starlite and B. D. Spilman's Pendragon. Winners in the Rose Hill race were Top Twig, owned by Thomas Atkinson, jr., and ridden by J. McCormick; Mrs. Thomas H. Somerville's Brittanicus, ridden by Noel Laing, was second, and Flying Horse Farm's The Prophet, ridden by Jack Skinner, came in third.

Neither Rider Is Injured.

The Loudoun Plate, two miles over brush course, had two spills. John, belonging to Miss Edith Cummings and ridden by H. W. Frost, went down in this race as also did Greatorex, from the Dorwood Stables with Davis in the saddle. Neither rider was injured.

Winners of this race were Willingdon, bay gelding of the Justa Farm Stable, and ridden by R. P. Hamilton; Patrick's Day, owned by Mrs. T. W. Durant, and ridden by R. C. Duffy, second, and Star Easter, owned and ridden by Harry Duffy, jr., third.

The last race of the day, the Three Oaks, one mile over turf course, was won by Free Wheeler, belonging to Mrs. T. W. Durant, with J. Davis in the saddle; Northwoods, of Justa Farm Stable, came in second, and Fluttering, belonging to F. S. Plummer, and ridden by D. Odell, came in third.

The second day of the race meet will be held next Wednesday afternoon when six races will be run. The first race will be called at 1:30.

Woman Pleads Guilty To Extortion Charges

San Francisco, April 15 (A.P.).—Mrs. Hallie Terstegge, 40, formerly of Louisville, Ky., pleaded guilty in Federal court today to charges of using the mails to defraud, and on motion of her attorney, James O'Conner, the case was referred to the probation officer for investigation.

Mrs. Terstegge admitted writing a letter last March to Arthur Howell, of Atlanta, requesting $5,000 and declaring that unless the money was sent the driver of a taxicab in which the two rode eight years ago the writer "intended to do you wrong." Howell died last December. The probation officer was ordered to make his report April 29.

Dying Man's Will In Pencil Is Valid

Brief Note Leaves Property Including 20 Minks, to Friend.

Pierre, S. Dak., April 15 (A.P.).—It didn't take Charley Eros long to make his will. Realizing he was dying last October, he took a pencil and a piece of paper and wrote as follows:

"I leave all my property, real and personal to Emil Bechtel; pleas notify him as he have to fide the minks. Good boy all.

"The Eagle Lodge pay an 100 dolar funeral expens. Do not luk for relative I got none."

Mr. Eros' estate consisted of some town lots at his home in Aberdeen, 20 live minks and other personal property, and a $1,000 insurance policy. The division of taxation, which received an inheritance tax report from his [illegible] today, said it was [illegible]

Crippled Man, Resourceful Genius, Is Capital Visitor

CARL WEIDMULLER, of Elizabeth, N. J., is pictured as he appeared in a visit to Washington en route to Texas. Although almost totally helpless he has maintained a successful subscription agency.

Almost Totally Disabled, He Is on Pilgrimage of Gratitude.

The National Capital, itself usually the mecca of pilgrimages coming this way, last week was only a port of call for an interesting voyage of gratitude which has as its real destination a town in the Texan Panhandle.

The visitor was Carl Weidmuller, of Elizabeth, N. J., who for more than seventeen years has lain on his back almost totally helpless from a violent attack of rheumatoid arthritis deformans. With a mind amazingly sharp in contrast with the paralysis of most of his body, Mr. Weidmuller has not only refused to bow his spirit in defeat, but, rising superior to his physical handicaps, has made himself a successful business man whose enterprise reaches all over the globe.

Just before the United States entered the World War Carl was a promising young craftsman. The blow of nearly total disablement fell with cruel suddenness upon him and his young wife, Margaret. But it was about the time the heartening slogan, "A man may be down but he's not out," was coined and it came with a clear message to Mr. Weidmuller. He cast his active mind about for something a man virtually chained to a bed could do to make his own way in the world. Then there chanced his way a little newspaper story about a man identically situated who had reared a successful periodical subscription agency with Uncle Sam's mails as his effective coadjutor. Carl wrote to the man, who promptly gave him a thumbnail education in how it could be done. They became fast unseen friends.

The battle had not been won at this point, however, for the first step demanded ability to operate a typewriter. Carl's fingers would not, could not, go to work, so he fired them and hired in their place some rubber-tipped clothes pins, with which, clamped to his hands, he soon learned to typewrite at good speed. This was the first of numerous little inventions by which he has surmounted the loss of various faculties.

Through his indomitable perseverance Weidmuller's busines has grown amazingly. He has been able to maintain a comfortable home and not long ago he achieved the long-cherished ambition of a conveyance in which he could leave his dwelling. He acquired a limousine, into the tonneau of which the manufacturer built, according to specifications Carl personally worked out, a couch that would fit his rigid body and make riding endurable.

He tried out this magic perambulating bed on a couple of short trips, luxuriating in a real glimpse of the outside world after so many years of imprisonment. Then he announced to his household:

"I think I will take a little run down to Texas."

So the other day, piloted by his chauffeur-secretary and accompanied by the wife who never leaves his side and her niece, Miss Marie Hamilton, he passed through Washington, well on his way to the Texas Panhandle and payment of his debt of gratitude by a visit with his friend and mentor.

He stopped overnight here at the Washington Hotel, and enjoyed a sight-seeing tour. Always an ardent admirer of President Roosevelt, he observed cheerfully:

"Well, the 'new deal' seems to contain a lot of aces. The President has the situation well in hand so I guess it is all right for me to go along toward Texas."

Madame Bari Seeking Place To Exhibit Chinese Models

Models of groups of Chinese people, copied from ancient paintings, will be shown in Washington soon if their owner, Mme. Fatima Bari, is able to find a place to exhibit them, she said yesterday. About 100 groups comprise her collection, which was copied from ancestral pictures in the homes of her Chinese friends, Mme. Bari said.

The miniature figures are made from a sort of porcelain, the composition of which is known only to the artist. They are clothed in silken garments and ornamented with pearls, jade and other precious stones. Some of the most skillful needleworkers in China worked for fifteen years in clothing the figure, Mme. Bari said. Her collection also includes copies of ancient torture instruments and a copy of the imperial boat, the wood of which is inlaid with blue bird feathers.

Mme. Bari is the granddaughter of an Asiatic Indian who moved to China. It was through her grandfather's influence that she was able to obtain permission to copy the pictures, which are not usually shown to outsiders. After completing her collection, Mme. Bari began to exhibit them publicly. She has shown the figures in Rangoon, in Burma, in Toronto, New York, San Antonio and Houston.

Minnesota House Limits Women's Hours of Work

St. Paul, April 15 (A.P.).—The Minnesota House today passed a Senate bill limiting to 54 hours the number of hours women may be employed each week. The vote was 88 to 19. The measure goes back to the Senate for concurrence in an amendment.

The bill would be effective July 1 and would affect public housekeeping, manufacturing, mechanical, mercantile, laundry and telephone workers. Several exemptions are made, including canning factories and telephone operators in municipalities of less than 1,500.

Personally, he favors giving the Commissioners wide authority to transfer funds within the District government. This would make between $320,000 and $840,000, left over from unexpended 1934 balances, available for general use.

Senator Thomas further favors permitting the Commissioners to draw at need from the $1,250,000 fund for relief purposes, to meet unemployment emergencies, and come back to Congress with a deficiency, if necessary.

The Oklahoma chairman of the District Appropriations Subcommittee likened the plight of Washington citizens to the Indians on reservations in his own State. He said he would do everything in his power to see that they get justice.

There is a move under way in the subcommittee not only to provide funds for Calvert Street Bridge, over Rock Creek, but to make those funds immediately available, in view of the urgent need for a new structure.

Meanwhile representatives of the Medical Society, the Tuberculosis Association and the Visiting Nurse Society planned a last word of protest before the subcommittee tomorrow on proposed reductions in the estimates for the Tuberculosis Hospital, the equipment of the new Children's Tuberculosis Sanatorium and the special health schools for tuberculosis children.

Dr. A. Berkley Coulter, chairman of the tuberculosis committee of the Medical Society, will make the appeal for the physicians; Mrs. Ernest R. Grant, for the Tuberculosis Association, and Mrs. Whitman Cross, for the Visiting Nurse Society.

E. R. Williams, of the Roosevelt Parent-Teachers Association, will lead a delegation of representative citizens before the subcommittee to appeal for restoration of $112,500 cut from the appropriation for school [illegible]

NAVY CLOSES PROBE OF BLIMP DISASTER

Kenworthy, Who Ordered J-3 Flight, Says Cummins Died Like Hero.

Lakehurst, N. J., April 15 (A.P.).—Officially terminating its investigation of the loss of the Blimp J-3, a naval court of inquiry adjourned today until Tuesday, when it will resume its inquiry into the destruction of the U. S. S. Akron with sessions at the Washington Navy Yard.

The session that concluded the study of Lakehurst phases of the two disasters was brief. Lieut. Comdr. Jesse L. Kenworthy, acting commandant of the air base here, was the only witness. His testimony preceded brief summations by Judge Advocate Lieut. Comdr. Ralph G. Pennoyer and his counsel, Lieut. C. J. Maguire.

Cummins Died Hero.

Kenworthy, named an interested party in the inquiry because he authorized the use of the blimp in the search for Akron survivors, told the court he learned Lieut. Comdr. D. E. Cummins, skipper of the blimp, who was killed in the crash, died heroically.

Quoting Sergt. Joseph Forsythe, of the New York police plane that rescued five of the blimp's crew when she crashed off Beach Haven, April 4, Kenworthy, said that Cummins, offered help by the plane, shouted, "Go get the rest. I'm all right."

When the plane returned, after rescuing the blimp's survivors, to the spot where Cummins had been swimming, he had disappeared. Besides Cummins, Pasquale Bettio of the crew, was killed in the crash.

Circumstances Stressed.

Pennoyer in his summation of the J-3 investigation urged the court to remember in its deliberations the stress of circumstances that led Kenworthy to order the blimp aloft in bad weather, in the hope that she might rescue Akron survivors erroneously reported as clinging to wreckage at sea.

"We must ask ourselves what would a reasonable man have done," he said. "What would we ourselves have done under the circumstances."

When court adjourned, Pennoyer announced that it would present its findings, when they had been reached, to the Secretary of the Navy.

Former Rum Vessel Blows Up and Sinks

New London, Conn., April 15 (A.P.). The trimotored Coast Guard patrol boat No. 822, a converted run runner, blew up at her wharf at the Coast Guard base here early this morning, caught fire and sank.

No one had been aboard the craft since yesterday afternoon. The cause of the explosion could not be determined but it was believed gasoline fumes accumulated in the bilges might have become ignited. Coast Guard officials said they would raise the craft to determine, if possible, if this theory is correct.

(Associated Press.)

Cooperation of all the eleven great nations invited was pledged last night to the far-reaching program of Washington parleys on world economic recovery which President Roosevelt will hold in coming weeks.

Argentina's formal acceptance, made known yesterday at the State Department, was the last of the eleven. Each will send an outstanding member of its government to talk over with the President means of reviving international trade.

At the head of this distinguished line of dignitaries is Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald of Great Britain, who left England yesterday and will arrive April 21.

Other Leaders Due.

Others coming are Edouard Herriot, former premier of France, arriving April 24; Prime Minister Richard E. Bennett of Canada, arriving April 25; Finance Minister Guido Jung, of Italy, due about May 1; Finance Minister T. V. Dr. Hans Luther, new German Ambassador and former governor of the Reichsbank, who will represent Germany in the conversations, arrived Friday and visited the State Department yesterday to meet Secretary Cordell Hull and arrange to see the President soon.

Argentina, Brazil and Chile, which complete the list of nations specially invited, have not yet officially designated their representatives.

53 Nations Invited.

Fifty-three nations in all have been asked to join in the exchanges of views, 42 of them through the regular diplomatic channels.

Russia is left out since the United States has no diplomatic relations with the Soviet, and yesterday there was new speculation as to whether the Roosevelt administration might recognize the Russian government before long, so as to facilitate economic cooperation with that country and pave the way for even more concerted action at the world economic conference in London, June 15. Russia is to be represented there.

However, the rumors that Russian recognition might be forthcoming before the London conference brought no comment at either the White House or State Department.

District public schools will be closed all this week for the Easter holidays.

Examinations for junior and senior high school teachers in the white schools will be held tomorrow and Tuesday and for teachers in colored schools Tuesday and Wednesday. The next Board of Education meeting will be held April 26 instead of this week.

M'DONALD HOPEFUL ON SAILING FOR U. S.

long talks with President Roosevelt, with hope that, between us, we may be able to do something that will be of benefit to the world as a whole." Mr. MacDonald said as he boarded his train for Southampton in London.

In addition to a group of experts, he is accompanied by his daughter, Ishbel, who was with him when he visited President Hoover in 1929.

Paris, April 15 (U.P.).—The French government moved today to make a breach in its high tariff wall before the departure of former Premier Edouard Herriot for the international conversations with President Roosevelt in Washington.

Herriot will sail Monday on the Ile de France, reaching the United States two days behind Prime Minister J. Ramsay MacDonald, of Great Britain.

The government introduced a project in the Chamber of Deputies, asking authorization to abolish or reduce the vexatious 4 to 6 per cent import tax to which numerous nations, including the United States, have objected. Elimination of tariff barriers is expected to be one of the primary topics at the Washington conferences.

The new project, which is expected to be pushed through when the Chamber of Deputies reconvenes on May 16, would give the authorities power to reduce or eliminate entirely the tax on certain goods from certain countries, according to the discretion of the authorities. The government believes the measure will facilitate trade treaty negotiations and will be a welcome gesture in connection with the coming world economic conference.

Keep your face toward the Sun and the Shadows will fall behind

By GEORGE D. RILEY

IN the early spring of 1932, four men, met to decide whether or not it would be possible to start a gymnasium with the very limited funds available among them. All were interested in weight lifting, fencing, wrestling and kindred sports.

They believed there were many others like themselves who would be glad to have the opportunity to develop and build up their bodies and attain better health, but who were without the facilities with which to achieve this end. Obviously other men must be interested in the project if it were to succeed.

These four men, Messrs. Workman, Stoute, Hudlow and Rothrock, formed a club that was to be known as the Washington Weight Lifting and Athletic Club. Last August they rented a large portion of the upper floor of a building in the rear of 1731 K street northwest as the beginning of what they hoped would eventually be a good, private gymnasium. The four donated all their personal equipment, consisting of bar bells, dumbbells, fencing paraphernalia, &c., and built a wrestling mat, lockers and shower bath. The floor was then sanded and the room freshly painted. Then the hunt for members began.

Because of their contacts in various Government departments the new members were obtained largely from this source. The membership has gradually increased from four to sixteen, and the club has facilities to accommodate new members. Of the present members three are in the airways division, Department of Commerce; eight are patent examiners, in the Patent Office, and one hails from Bolling Field. The others are connected with business enterprises.

THE CLUB is desirous of increasing its membership, and any one interested should contact Mr. Tomelden, of the Patent Office, or Messrs. Gale, Workman or Rothrock, of the airways division, or a note addressed to the Washington W. L. and A. Club, rear of 1731 K street northwest, will suffice. References are required, as well as the approval of the club members, prior to the admission of new members.

A modern amateur weight-lifting contest, using the three Olympic lifts, is to be held in the near future and will be announced later in this column.

It is hoped that the club will soon be able to enter teams in several competitive sports, such as tennis and fencing.

The club is composed at present of amateurs only, and it is intended to keep it so. For this reason, professional athletes are not desired, as the club might then attain a quasi-professional reputation which would conflict with its amateur status.

For any one out of condition and run down, and desirous of acquiring not only health but unusual vitality, this club is the proper medium of attaining this result. Three periods of 40 minutes each per week are all that is necessary when using weights sufficiently light for the individual. Health and vitality with their attendant sound digestion and sense of physical well-being can thus be acquired.

All the members train with bar bells, and although most of them are novices yet several have become unusually strong and acquired unusual agility and quickness, with a corresponding increase in muscular development.

Weight lifting with bar bells is a comparatively new sport in America, but is rapidly growing. Many college and university coaches are realizing the great possibilities of developing physical superteams with bar bells.

This club follows the doctrine defined in the Strength Magazine, which is the recognized official organ of weight lifting in America. Mr. Mark Berry, of the Strength Magazine, was the official American Olympic coach in weight lifting last year, and is a recognized authority on the subject.

There are, no doubt, many readers of the Federal Diary who will be interested in joining this club.

FRED ORSINGER, Kingfish of the Aquarium in the Commerce Building, is establishing a precedent and will hold the aquarium open to visitors today who may wish to see the exhibit after they have viewed the famous cherry blossoms around the Tidal Basin.

Orsinger assures us the aquarium is in the pink of condition. Visitors will find a miniature hatchery in operation from which millions (and it really is millions) of yellow perch have been spawned and are now wiggling around in a brood tank. And more coming every hour.

Another big tank is literally alive with baby chinook salmon. These salmon were hatched some time ago and are being held until they reach the fingerling size (3 or 4 inches), then they will be turned over to Virginia and Maryland authorities and released in streams leading to the Potomac. It is hoped this will establish a salmon industry something like that which exists on the Pacific Coast, where the Chinook spawn in the rivers go out to sea and mature, then return to spawn again.

Another interesting exhibit awaiting Easter visitors is the two-headed turtle. It has been said that this is the "consolidation" baby of the aquarium—two turtles using one shell.

In addition to the special exhibits which "just happen" to be on hand for Easter Sunday, the aquarium's usual stock of interesting species are all hale and hearty.

MISS GLADYS LIFFORD, of the Commercial Intelligence Division of the Department of Commerce, who is sergeant at arms of the Delta Tau Gamma Sorority, Beta Chapter, of the Columbia School of Drafting, is making quite a reputation for keeping the sorority sisters in order during meetings. Miss Lifford is nearing the completion of her course in topographic drafting at the Columbia School and is to be awarded the school's honor pin for her class for the month of March.

Miss Gladys Lifford

Speaking of the Columbia School of Drafting brings to mind some of the Government draftsmen of the long, long ago who banded together and established this school which for the past 23 years has supplied practically all of the draftsmen to enter the Government service in the bureaus in Washington and in the field offices. Those associated with the school in that day, in addition to the late Roy C. Claflin, United States Patent Office, who was its founder, are John H. Pellen, recently retired as chief draftsman, United States Bureau of Reclamation, Department of Interior; the late John C. Mulford, United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Paul J. Leverone, United States Bureau of Reclamation and National Park Service, now principal of the school. In addition to teaching hundreds of students at the local school in the City of Washington, the Columbia School has taught thousands of students in every State and in every foreign country through its correspondence department.

"I remember," says Henry J. Frank, Internal Revenue, "that when J. H. Callan was assistant to the commissioner of internal revenue, that he never had but one chair in his office. That was the one at his desk.

"He always greeted visitors cordially and then sat down. It seemed to speed up interviews and business in general, for the visitors were always free to leave without much ado."

The "letting out" process has begun again at Crop Production Loan, with 200 or more leaving this week, a large number from the District of Columbia.

"It is impossible to have a system in placing and replacing the personnel," it was explained. "Each employe has been given a week's notice this time, instead of the heretofore day or hour's notification. In addition they are given allowance for leave.

"Most of those leaving are from outside the nineteen States served by the Washington office. It is a painful task this thing of 'letting out' friends, those who have served us well."

MISS EDNA C. SWENSON,* library assistant, Agriculture, is one of those who, in the spring, yield to the urge of the season, and step blithely down Martial lane, escorted. Yesterday she became the wife of James Souber, a teacher in the Eastern High School. During the last ten days, Mrs. Souber has been appropriately complimented by her many friends with teas and "showers." The Federal Diary expresses the hope, in which Swarmi Fedd joins, that in the Book of Matrimony she will find catalogued many events of happiness and a great number of delightful memories.

APPOINTMENT of William Segaloff, of Branch 1, as vice president of the U. N. A. P. O. C., adds another great accomplishment to his splendid record of activities in the association.

William Segaloff.

He was appointed to the service in November, 1913, and assigned as a subclerk in Station G, New York City. On being promoted to the regular force he was sent to the inquiry division and from there assigned to the foreign station in May, 1914, and has served in the division of foreign mails ever since.

He joined the association from the first day of appointment, and became actively interested shortly after. His aggressive activities were recognized when he was appointed delegate, and amazed the officers and members of Branch 1 by turning in 45 applications for membership from the foreign station, and has kept up his good work, continually enrolling new members for the branch.

In the great salary campaigns of 1923 and 1925 he took an active interest and suggested and contracted for the famous posters captioned "Help Those Who Serve You," which were placed on the elevated and subway stations in New York City.

As delegate to the national convention in Cleveland in 1925, and although attending his first national convention, he was appointed on the resolutions committee. He also attended conventions at Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Baltimore, Dallas and Boston.

AT the Boston convention he was appointed chairman of the committee on group insurance by our late beloved president, "Chris" Franciscus, and filled the position in such a manner that what was expected to be one of the most difficult undertakings ever to confront the officers and delegates at a convention of our association was simplified and the solution of this vital problem reached a definite conclusion, due to his intelligent and satisfactory report. He showed a thorough knowledge of group insurance and the needs of the members. He was appointed vice president by our president, Thomas F. Dolan.

Mr. Segaloff, in addition to his national office, holds membership in Branch 1 of the association in New York City. This branch has approximately 5,000 members and is the largest local branch of Postoffice Employes in the world.

BY virtue of his office, Mr. Segaloff is one of the three trustees of the group insurance division. The insurance is underwritten by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. of New York, protecting the members in policies aggregating $14,000,000.

Almost $1,500,000 has been paid to beneficiaries since its adoption six years ago.

EMPLOYES of the Department of Agriculture, South Building, have been given an Easter present—a nice new board walk on the north side of the building. For some time employes have been forced, in bad weather, to wade through a sea of mud in order to reach their place of occupation.

Now that the employes have been accorded underfoot consideration, it might be well to have a department watchman act as traffic officer on B street southwest, between 4:30 and 5 p. m., so that pedestrians may be guaranteed safety in crossing the street in that neighborhood during the evening up-town rush.

THESE representatives from various Federal Employes Union, No. 2, branches were installed by National Organizer John D. Cloud at the board meeting Friday night:

Navy Department branch: L. C. McNemar, William B. Crowell, M. S. Noyes, E. L. Bennett, Lewis W. Dorset, T. B. Snoddy, C. A. Ketcham, C. M. Baruch, Glen H. Draper; Interior Department branch: Samuel C. Nichols, Mrs. M. Dorothy Dick, E. J. Essick, J. F. Deeds, John Deno, J. A. Moss, D. E. Thomas. Interstate Commerce Commission: L. C. Hosley, E. A. Behrend. Labor Department: Miss Marie Correll, Miss Rose Veber. Veterans Administration: Mrs. Esther L. Burgan, Miss Ida Kemp, John L. Julius, Thomas Bamford, H. W. Farmer, A. J. Brosseau, Miss Edith M. Stewart, Charles W. Stewart, Ulrey J. Biller, Miss Lillian H. Carliner, Miss Mary Lebo, Charles W. Garlock, Mrs. Jessie Bowman, Mrs. Albra E. Reising, Miss Elizabeth Fabiny, Miss Leola Carter, Leo W. Ronemus, Dr. George W. Beckett, W. Burton Uppercue, R. E. Lowe. Agriculture Department: Miss Lottie L. Anderson, Miss Blanche Clark, Dr. C. C. Clark, Miss Bertha F. Cooke, Albert M. Day, A. C. Edwards, Jack B. Haile, Mrs. Marie Heisley, Arthur H. Howell, Daniel O'Flaherty, John A. Schricker, Elmer Thompson, Mrs. Daisy Edgerton, O. L. Heisley, Miss Minnie Mackey, Earl W. Sheets, Henry Wold, Earl W. Loveridge. Commerce Department branch: Mrs. Ethel M. Winfree, J. W. Barrett, H. S. Clem, Edwin F. Ludwig, E. W. Skartvedt, Mrs. Flora B. Murphy, L. P. Sissman, Samuel J. Snyder, Miss Agnes McKelvey, R. N. Saxton. General Accounting Office: James S. Brent, Charles H. Smith, Thomas A. Wilkinson, Miss Catherine Furey, John L. Bateman, O. B. Bowman, Curtis S. Fesser, Rupert H. Margeson, Miss Margaret Robertson, William Walsh. State Department: Miss Dorothy Jackson, Daniel J. Durning, Civil Service Commission: Dr. Howard A. Edson. Library of Congress: James P. Mullin.

After the board balloted on executive council members the tellers reported these elected: Miss Marie Correll, Labor Department; Miss Lottie L. Anderson, Agriculture Department; J. Ernest Brault and James H. Solt, general accounting office; Harold Keenan, Commerce Department; E. I. Snyder, Navy Department; Harry T. Kranz, Civil Service Commission. These members were installed by Luther C. Steward, president, N. F. F. E. Mr. Steward addressed the board of representatives and discussed the outlook for Government employes. He dealt on events leading up to the recent additional pay cut and, in response to many questions from board members, dealt with many other phases of problems confronting Government employes.

The board heard reports from its finance and membership committees and also from local officers. The legislative committee report requested more information from board members relative to inequities caused by the additional pay cut and called attention to articles being written by Myron E. Andrews, research and educational committee, on the cost of living and cost of living indexes. Board members were urged to follow these articles and make a study of this question. Upon recommendation of the legislative committee the board authorized the secretary-treasurer to send a letter to the national organization indorsing the recent statement of Mr. Steward, relating to willingness of Federal employes to do their patriotic duty and accept a further pay reduction during the period of national emergency, even though as an organization and as individuals they do not believe lowered pay is the way to economic recovery. The resolution was discussed at length and adopted.

The executive council was authorized to study the District of Columbia rent situation. A resolution on this subject was referred to it in connection with this study.

Mr. Cloud, national organizer, announced that after nine months service here he is being sent to another city and congratulated Washington locals on their splendid spirit, predicting they will shortly show many substantial increases. He laid particular emphasis on the purchasing service offered by Washington locals to their membership and urged the board members to spread the idea among their members.

Mr. Cloud was given a rising vote of thanks for his splendid work while in Washington and received the good wishes of the board.

Mr. Steward was also given a rising vote of thanks for his very splendid, informative address, it being one of the best he has ever made to the board of representatives.

The New Brotherhood

AS the beautiful Easter time dawns and we celebrate the Resurrection of Our Lord, it seems to me that never has the Christ spirit been so manifest as now. Toppled from its high estate, the Golden Calf is no longer supreme. The want and the need of the multitude has cracked the hardness of our hearts and the common need has made us one great brotherhood. Each is holding out his hand to a weaker soul with a charity that makes itself acceptable through loving kindness, blessing the gift and the giver. Pain and suffering has burned away the alloy in human nature and left only the pure radiance of our higher selves.

Lord, I thank Thee for Thy chast'ning, for each tear and bitter moan. Would I know a brother's grieving if no grief had been my own? Would I know of high endeavor had the plane been soft and sweet? Would I falter ever higher had the rocks not bruised my feet? Would I stoop to help the fallen if no kinship I had known. Would I look for cause of sinning if no wrong I must atone? Would my tears fall for the erring if I never fell from grace? Had Thy rod not been uplifting would I strive to see Thy face?

ESTELLE M.-B. THOMPSON, Justice.

M'NUTT IS WIELDING LARGE ECONOMY AX

160 Indiana Boards Already Abolished or Merged Into Eight Bureaus.

Indianapolis, April 15 (A.P.).—Gov. Paul V. McNutt has begun to wield the new broom placed in his hands by the Indiana Legislature.

The prematurely gray young governor, exercising reorganization powers conferred by the General Assembly, has swept from the capital some of the 160 boards and commissions and has grouped those remaining under eight major departments.

These departments are executive, commerce and industry, audit and control, law, education, public works, State and treasury. The reorganization became effective today.

In the rearrangement the governor found no place for some bureaus that have functioned for many years, notably the conservation commission and the State board of charities. The work of these bodies will be carried on, however, by one or another of the eight departments.

The reorganization plan is experimental, the governor says, but he has ample authority, at least until another session of the Legislature, to make any changes he deems necessary.

The Legislature's wide grant of authority gave the governor a place on each board that will administer each department. It also gave him absolute authority to hire and dismiss all State employes.

This last prerogative has brought swarming into the executive's office Democratic party workers desirous of obtaining places on the State pay roll. So importunate have some job hunters been that the governor has arranged for a personal bodyguard, two members of the State police being assigned to him.

The salaries of those who receive appointments may be raised or lowered in accordance with the governor's judgment. In effecting the reorganization, however, the governor has worked toward economy and he estimates his plan will bring an annual saving of $3,000,000 in the cost of the State government.

Hecht Co. Volume Far Over Average

Newspaper Ads Get Credit for Trade Maintenance, James Rotto Says.

Success of the Hecht Co.'s recent anniversary sale is shown in the company's business report for March as compared to a year ago, according to James Rotto, sales and publicity director of the firm.

According to Federal Reserve figures for leading retail stores in Washington, there was a general falling off of 26.4 per cent in business in March, compared to 1932, whereas the Hecht Co. decrease was but 5.7 per cent, despite the fact that Easter this year is in April instead of March and that there was one less business day in 1933.

Mr. Rotto declared that a great portion of the credit for the success of the sale was due to newspaper advertising and that indications are that the month of April will show an increase over last year's totals.

2 Spanish Planes Collide; Pilot Dies

Woman and Child Hurt as One Ship Falls Afire on House.

Madrid, April 15 (A.P.).—An Army sergeant was killed and a woman and child were injured today when two planes of a squadron from Tablado Airdrome at Seville, which was cruising over Madrid, collided and one of them fell on the roof of a house.

Sergt. Gomas Garrido, who was piloting the plane, was killed. Corp. Andreas Garces, his observer, escaped in a parachute.

Their plane crashed in flames on the house of Antonia Garcia, a bellringer at the Church of the Conception. His wife and one child were injured, and the house was destroyed. The air squadron was under the command of Jose Rexach, who was noted as revolutionary aviator during the Spanish monarchy.

Last Day of Queen Contest Sees Flood of New Entries

Post Ends Long Search for 51 Most Charming Girls to Be Honored at Chicago Fair; Winners to Be Known Next Month.

The final day of The Washington Post's three months' search for the world's 51 most charming girls, to officiate as queen and her court of honor at the opening of the Century of Progress International Exposition at Chicago June 1, brought to the editor of the $10,500 Queen Contest the greatest number of entrants that have been received on any day since the announcement of the contest on January 15. Allowing only the necessary interval for the receipt of photographs which may have been placed in the mails before midnight last night, the official judges will shortly begin the task of selecting the fortunate winners from the thousands of pictures that have been submitted.

All photographs will be judged in Chicago by the distinguished committee, which consists of Mrs. Walter Borden, Mrs. Howard Linn, Mrs. R. McCormick, Mrs. William H. Mitchell, Mrs. Pauline Palmer, Wallace Kirk and John T. McCutcheon, as announced on January 15. The 51 girls they select will go to Chicago as the guests of The Washington Post and affiliated newspapers and will enjoy an elaborate program of entertainment under the chaperonage of leading Chicago society matrons. Every expense during their two weeks' stay at Chicago's most luxurious hotels will be paid by these newspapers, as well as their transportation from their homes and return, regardless of where they may live. In addition, they will be provided with beautiful gowns designed by leading modistes.

Three of the group will later be selected as queen and first and second ladies in waiting, and will receive awards of $5,000, $3,000 and $2,000, in the order of their selection. The remainder of the group will comprise the court of honor at the gorgeous opening ceremonies of the Century of Progress Exposition, June 1.

Because of the thousands of photographs which have been entered in this unique contest and the painstaking care that will be exercised in the analysis of each one, it is expected that the work of making the 51 selections will probably not be completed until the middle of May. As soon as the list of winners is completed, The Washington Post will announce their names and reveal the arrangements that have been made for their entertainment as the guests of the City of Chicago, the Century of Progress Exposition and The Washington Post with its affiliated newspapers.

CUMMINGS PLEDGES SERVICES TO PEOPLE

Washington, Not Financial District, Is Government Seat, He Declares.

Bridgeport, Conn., April 15 (A.P.). Homer S. Cummings, Attorney General of the United States, pledged himself tonight "to the last ounce of my energy," to make the Department of Justice to "serve the people of America who support it, and trust it, and rely upon it."

Cummings, the first member of the President's Cabinet from Connecticut since 1874, spoke at a testimonial dinner in his honor. He said he had looked forward with "pleasurable anticipation" to acting as Governor of the Philippines, paid tribute to Senator Thomas J. Walsh, who died just before he was to take office as Attorney General, and declared those "who thought the center of government was located in the financial district must learn its proper seat is at Washington."

"The Department of Justice," he said, "touches, in intimate fashion * * * the lives, the welfare, the security and the business activities of our people. * * * To the last ounce of my energy I shall endeavor to make that great agency of Government serve the people of America, who support it, and trust it, and rely upon it."

Declaring "a program of progress" has "entered the state of fulfillment," he said: "It is being developed under a leadership so inspiring that, schooled as I am in the disappointing business of politics, I feel my pulses stir and my heart leap again at the sight of America emerging from her dark dream.

"This is no time to assess responsibility for our present troubles in terms of narrow partisanship. * * * The artificial restraints that have dammed the flow of prosperity must be released once more; that which was unplanned or selfishly guided must take its place in an orderly governmental process and a great cleansing and rebuilding program must go forward to its conclusion.

"Those who have considered it legitimate to gamble with other people's money must abdicate their leadership, and those who have thought that the center of government was located in the financial district must learn that its proper seat is at Washington."

250 MORE REQUEST REMOVAL OF LONG

Meanwhile, Senator Pushes Plan to Change Rules, But Is Due to Fail.

(Associated Press.)

Senator Long (Democrat), Louisiana, pressed ahead yesterday in manufacturing a proposed change in Senate rules governing receipt of petitions reflecting on its members, even as a second communication urging an investigation of his fitness for a senatorial toga was received from 250 New Orleans citizens.

Addressed to Vice President Garner, the petition was formally noted in the record and referred to the Judiciary Committee for a decision, along with another petition from a score of citizens in smaller Louisiana towns, as to whether such communications were "privileged" for publication.

Francis Williams, chairman of the Jackson Democratic Club of New Orleans, signed the forwarding letter accompanying yesterday's petition, which was identical with that containing eleven charges against Long and forwarded to Garner Thursday by former Gov. John M. Parker, of St. Francisville.

Declared Most Oppressed.

In his letter, Williams described the signers as mostly persons of "moderate means" who have been "most oppressed" by Long's acts. Clerks, housewives, lawyers, plumbers and other workers were listed.

The petition requested a thorough investigation of Long's fitness to continue as a member of the Senate.

Parker had notified the Senate that similar petitions would be sent from every parish in Louisiana.

Long refused to reveal yesterday what he would recommend to govern future receipt and publication of such petitions.

Is Opposed to Change.

Chairman Ashurst of the Judiciary Committee told newspapermen yesterday he was opposed to changing the Senate rules governing receipt of petitions from outside groups. He added it was his belief the present laws were adequate to deal with publication of matter reflecting on senators and others, and that newspapers are responsible for publishing the contents of such petitions.

He reiterated what he told the Senate Friday—that he was opposed to a "precensorship" such as might result from denying the Senate the right to receive any kind of petition.

There was little likelihood that Long would succeed in his efforts to amend the rules.

FAITH AND FASHION DOMINATING TODAY

Many prominent Knights Templar will be in attendance at Arlington, as will high ranking members of the Army, Navy and Marine Corps, and of Congress. The President and Mrs. Roosevelt and family have been invited to attend.

Impressive services are planned at the Franciscan Monastery and the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception, Catholic University, both in Brookland, D. C.

Special services will be held, in addition to the larger services all over the city, at practically every one of the churches.

The brilliant fashion show along Washington's streets on Easter Sunday is expected to center on Connecticut avenue, downtown Sixteenth street and Massachusetts avenue northwest and F street.

If rain intervenes, hotels will undoubtedly absorb the colorful displays of feminine wardrobes and the dapper sartorial aspects of the men, also, which appear every year at Eastertide, whatever the economic situation of the land.

White House Will Have Old Style Egg Rolling

(Associated Press.)

A real old-style White House Easter egg rolling is in store for Washington boys and girls tomorrow, with a warm welcome assured them by Mrs. Roosevelt and her grandchildren.

Weather permitting, and the forecaster has been generally gloomy, the youngsters this year will take their Easter eggs straight, with no entertainment trimmings or winding of May poles or folk dancing on the green. They want every square foot of that green to roll their eggs upon.

It's tradition, and the custom of a half century being sturdy and strong, Mrs. Roosevelt agreed to let it have its way when the whole matter was explained to her.

In recent years, some attempt to modernize the old Capital custom has been made. The innovation did not meet with the approbation of many a gray-haired man who remembered how he rolled his eggs down a hummock at the age of 5. And women reporters of many years' experience in Washington also argued that a White House egg rolling should be nothing but an egg rolling.

From Mrs. Roosevelt's last press conference the word went out that only music from the Marine Band would accompany the fete.

The first Florence Crittenton home was founded in New York City on April 19, 1883, for the express purpose of aiding girls who had taken the wrong step and had been cast out by families and friends. There are now 65 such institutions, including the one in Washington.

Indorsed by five Presidents of the United States, and operating under the first charter to be granted by the Congress of the United States to a philanthropic body, the National Florence Crittenton Mission has become one of the outstanding institutions of American life.

Charles N. Crittenton, the founder, was a country boy who came to New York and worked up to a position of prominence and wealth. The mission was established as a memorial to a 4-year-old daughter, Flornece, who died suddenly. He spent the latter part of his life building up the institution all over the country.

A cofounder with Mr. Crittenton was Dr. Kate Waller Barrett, the wife of the then dean of St. Luke's Cathedral, in Atlanta, Ga. Moving to Washington some years after the first mission was established, she was a prime mover in the organization of a national association with headquarters here.

HOPI INDIANS' SHOW FEATURE AT HECHT'S

Primitive Arts and Crafts of Original Americans on View This Week.

For the next week, and possibly to continue through the remainder of April, at the Hecht Co. store will be an exhibition of primitive arts and crafts of the Hopi Indians from the towns or pueblos of those people who for centuries have inhabited the mountains and mesas of Arizona.

M. W. Billingsley, counselor of the Hopi chiefs, has brought to Washington for this purpose many examples of the work of these primitive people, together with a number of the Indians. At the head of the party is Chief Kolchovtewa, otherwise "Rope-out-of-a-bear-hide," with Chief Salostache, "Evergreen Shoes," the snake priest. These are the principal attractions.

Mr. Billingsley will give two lectures each day, at 10 a. m. and 4 p. m. on the second floor of Hecht's, where Mrs. Edythe Sterling Billingsley will act as hostess and interpreter.

The Hopis are the descendants of the Indians who for ages inhabited the American continent from southern Mexico to the Andes. They were the original "Cliff Dwellers," and they still show the talents of their ancestors which have recently created such great enthusiasm among archeologists, especially those explorers who have uncovered much of the territory of the southern regions of Mexico.

The chiefs and squaws will appear in their native costumes and will undoubtedly prove a great attraction to the visitors to Hecht's, expecilly to the children, who are invited to attend the exposition, which is open to all without cost.

Machine Now Finishes Wood Japanese Style

The Sugi process of finishing wood, created by the Japanese and once done only by hand, is now being turned out by machine in Washington with just as beautiful results, W. G. Glenn revealed in an address over WJSV last night, given under the auspices of the Washington Chamber of Commerce.

The Sugi process does not put something on wood, but brings out its inherent natural beauty and character, Mr. Glenn explained. The work is done by the Columbian Iron Works, of which Emil Schmid is president. The range of application for Sugi wood is practically unlimited, Mr. Glenn said.

MR. MacDONALD COMES.

Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald of Great Britain is on his way to Washington, to take counsel with President Roosevelt on the state of the universe. Mr. MacDonald's outline of the purpose of his voyage, as given to the House of Commons, takes on the idealistic and romantic tinge which colors all his utterances. He is a remarkable man whose slight deficiencies in the realm of practical economics are more than offset by a warm heart and an unshakable faith in the ultimate triumph of good over evil. He is accompanied by hard-hearted advisers, and will find here well-posted representatives of Britain who can supply necessary information.

The personal contacts of world statesmen during the years since the war do not seem to have been very successful in restoring confidence or mending the broken machinery of every-day living. But the statesmen are doing the best they can, each for his own country. Mr. MacDonald, acting for a nation whose relationships are complex to a maddening extent, may be depended upon to do his utmost to find a method whereby the nations can protect their own interests while co-operating for their mutual advantage. His visit will be successful to the extent of demonstrating his desire to improve the world, even if it should not yield tangible results.

On their side, Americans will cling to the hope that conferences between heads of governments will lead to better times for all nations. These spokesmen are not free agents, but are trustees of the interests of the governments they represent. Mr. MacDonald can not make any gifts, nor can Mr. Roosevelt bestow any. The war debt, for instance, can not be wiped away by any conference. Nevertheless, by putting their wits to work on all factors making up the world problem, the British and American trustees of government may find something worth while to recommend to their respective peoples.

BUSINESS OR SPOILS?

Postmaster General Farley is trying to find ways and means of reducing the deficit of his department. Higher postage rates on first class mail have failed to bring about the desired result. Mr. Farley recognizes the need of cutting down expenditures. He is reported to be contemplating slashes that would bring the expenses of the postal service into reasonable balance with its income.

This phase of the Postmaster General's program stands out in sharp contrast with the report that he is considering the advisability of relieving first and second class postmasters of civil service requirements. One of the most serious handicaps of the postal system is that it is always in the hands of politicians instead of business men. President Wilson sought to remedy the evils of the spoils system in the postal service by subjecting the more important postmasterships to civil service rules. These requirements do not eliminate politicians from jobs of this kind, for the appointments remain in the hands of the President, but they do give some assurance that competent men will be selected. Reports that Mr. Farley is considering the abolition of this standard of efficiency do not harmonize with his earnest attempt to balance the postal budget.

President Roosevelt has frequently affirmed his belief in the merit system. Even before his inauguration he gave assurance that civil service regulations would be respected and that clamoring jobhunters would not be allowed to encroach upon efficient employes already in the classified service. In spite of this fact, however, some positions have been lifted out of civil service and awarded to the faithful who were active in the campaign last fall. Apparently some of the President's subordinates do not have his high respect for the civil service.

Where the merit system is well established it is extremely demoralizing to superimpose the spoils system upon it. It does not seem possible that Mr. Farley intends to distribute important postmasterships as mere political plums. The tendency ought to be in the other direction. Why should any postmastership be awarded on a political basis? During this drive for economy the time is ripe for placing the postal system on a business foundation. If that is done the deficit problem will be easier to solve.

DR. HANS LUTHER.

Dr. Hans Luther, German Ambassador, has arrived in Washington and will soon enter upon his duties. He is welcome to the United States Government and people, and they will not throw any obstacles in the way of a better understanding with Germany, which Dr. Luther will endeavor to promote. He is confronted with a very difficult task, which may be made easier by his agreeable personality.

The new government of Germany is breaking fresh ground in an effort to consolidate the nation and define its relations to its neighbors. It is intensely anti-Communist, which appeals to the sympathies of Americans; but it also pursues a bigoted anti-Jewish policy, to the extent of depriving Jews of the rights enjoyed by all other German citizens. This policy places Germany on the defensive in dealing with all enlightened nations where there is no discrimination against citizens because of race or religion.

The United States is eager to promote good feeling among all nations in order to restore world prosperity as soon as possible. In participating in the disarmament conference in spite of repeated disappointments the United States has helped to obtain for Germany equality of rights as to armaments. Any reactionary policy, such as denial of equal rights to citizens, is a setback to the cause of world co-operation for peace, disarmament, and restoration of commerce. Dr. Luther is an economist and financier of first rank, fully cognizant of the necessity of international good will as the basis of general co-operation. His opportunity to interpret American public sentiment will enable him to wield great influence with his government in behalf of a good understanding between the two nations.

AN UNWILLING CZAR.

So far as practical results are concerned, the grafting of the Simpson price-fixing scheme to the farm relief bill is not important. President Roosevelt and Secretary Wallace are opposed to this provision, and since its application would be optional with the secretary, it would merely lie in disuse during the present administration. But the adoption of this provision by the Senate may be significant for other reasons.

The agricultural relief bill would give the secretary broad powers to lease land, to contract with farmers for acreage reduction, to restrict shipment of farm produce in interstate commerce and to regulate the whole industry of farming. To add arbitrary powers of price-fixing to this array of authority is supererogation. If all other methods should fail, it is difficult to see how prices could be boosted by simply issuing decrees from Washington. But the radicals want to force this power upon Secretary Wallace so that he will have no excuse to offer if prices should not be forced up.

If this provision should be enacted, it would put the secretary in an embarrassing situation. He would have the legal power to fix prices on farm products at a point that would yield a profit to the farmer, plus cost of production, but he might not have the economic power to keep prices at such levels. The tendency would be, therefore, for all the responsibility to fall upon him, instead of upon Congress.

Furthermore, the large vote for the Simpson nostrum shows how little faith the Senate has in the administration's farm bill. Artificial stabilization of prices has failed so many times that the Senate is skeptical. If it should fail again—well, the Senate just wants a dose of magic in the bill to apply as a last resort.

If the Senate is insistent, the administration probably will not offer strenuous objections to the Simpson scheme. After all, President Roosevelt offers the whole plan as an experiment on an untrod path. The way to solve such problems, he has said, is to take one plan and try it, and if it doesn't work, to try another one. Under this theory the inclusion of another optional panacea in the bill may not be considered worth fighting over, even though it would give Mr. Wallace more power than he cares to handle.

GERMAN-ITALIAN ACCORD.

The public announcement by Vice-Chancellor von Papen and Captain Goering, following their conferences in Rome, that Germany and Italy would henceforth work in harmony toward the same objectives, will not tend to lessen the tension already existing in Central Europe. Particularly is this so since all pretense is abandoned that the visit of the German representatives was merely one of courtesy. It is now freely admitted that the Mussolini proposal of a four-power plan was discussed, and generally agreed to, and that the disturbing question of treaty revision was also fully considered.

Col. von Papen announced that Germans were anxious the idea of treaty revision should soon find practical application, adding that both he and Chancellor Hitler regarded a close understanding between Italy and Germany as one of the basic principles of German policy. With the Fascist demand growing in Austria for renewal of close ties with Germany, visions of the reestablishment of the Triple Entente are seen by France and the nations of the Little Entente.

Treaty revision has been one of the cardinal points of the Hitler platform for years. The nations that were formed outright as a result of the war or which acquired important territorial additions are apprehensive that as soon as the present acute national situation has passed in Germany the disturbing problem of revision will be forced to the front. France is definitely opposed to revision and Poland is, naturally, apprehensive of any such move. Just how firm an agreement has been reached between Italy and Germany, and how far Mussolini will go in supporting Hitler in his desires to recapture German territory, are points on which many European nations await further information with greatest interest.

SOVIET JUSTICE.

The trial of six Britons in Moscow, on charges of espionage, sabotage and bribery, has already become a mockery of justice and common sense. The testimony of certain Russians is so palpably false and fantastic that the case would be thrown out of any civilized court. One of the British defendants, after stammering a confession of guilt, plucked up courage to testify that he had been subjected to duress and that his signed "confession" was a tissue of lies. The chief British defendant, manager of the Metropolitan-Vickers Company, boldly declared in court that the trial was a conspiracy against the company, based upon the false testimony of terrorized prisoners.

In view of the concocted charges against German engineers some years ago, and in view of the known tactics of Soviet propaganda, it may be safely assumed that the Russian secret police have been directed to frame false charges against the Britishers for a two-fold purpose: First, to arouse the resentment of ignorant Russians against foreign countries by making it appear that they are plotting war against Communism; and second, to shift the blame upon foreigners for the breakdowns that invariably occur when Russian mechanics handle modern machinery. These so-called mechanics, who are little above cattle in intelligence, succeed in wrecking foreign-made machinery as fast as it is installed.

It does not stand to reason that a strong British concern would destroy its business with the Russians by deliberately wrecking the plants which it builds. The purpose of the alleged sabotage, according to the red prosecutors, is to prevent Russia from producing war material in anticipation of the war which foreign powers are planning against Russia. This is pure idiocy. A thousand facts could be advanced to prove that it is idiocy. But unfortunately for the prisoners, these facts can not be presented in the corrupt court that is trying them, nor would the facts be believed by the credulous victims of Communist propaganda.

Now French propaganda helps Soviet propaganda to fill the wastebaskets in American newspaper offices. It's a fine thing for the wastebasket industry.

PAUL HUDSON.

RECIPROCITY AND GOLD

By LAWRENCE SULLIVAN.

In their paroxysms of applause for Secretary Hull's bold jousting with the hydraheaded tariff monster, many Americans have paused to ask the question, If there are to be reciprocal trade arrangements what is to be the common denominator for the reciprocity? Are values in world exchange to be measured in American gold dollars, or in the managed, but steadily depreciating, currencies of those governments which have abandoned anchored money?

Injecting this serious note into the heretofore unanchored tariff discussions, many reputable American traders now point out that, even in theory, reciprocity can be achieved only in terms of some mutually accepted basic standard of value. It is not possible, for example, to work out a world-wide system of reciprocity based on, say, cocoanuts on the one hand and banana oil on the other. No more can men reciprocate on six yards of silk traded for eight quarts of aspirin tablets.

* * * *

To ascertain relative values and facilitate trade, humanity gradually has evolved through the ages a system of money. Money puts one price on cocoanuts and another on banana oil. These prices, shifting though they may be in relation to each other, facilitate international exchange on a basis of permanently fixed standards. The all-important function of money, it is well to recall, is that it shall provide a fixed standard, by which to measure all values. However much commodity values may change, the need for some common denominator in exchange still is inescapable. When this common denominator is destroyed, as at present today throughout most of the world, nations begin exchanging peanuts for petroleum, wheat for coffee, cotton for quinine. This condition is known as the breakdown of exchange. It tends gradually toward stagnation in international trade and thence to the annihilation of national economy.

To date this breakdown of exchange, so far as America is concerned, rules only in the field of international trade. At home, thus far, the dollar still is worth a dollar. But in attempting to translate American dollars into foreign currencies nowadays the American trader must undertake to keep abreast of the last word in currency management abroad. He must keep abreast not only of the management formula, or fantasy, in one country, but in every country. For in every country money values shift from day to day and from hour to hour, sometimes by "management" and sometimes by sheer chance and accident. Whatever the factors in these fluctuations, the distressing results are ever the same: No one can possibly know precisely where, as the saying goes, he is at. Traders are forever in the position of children trying to catch an image of the rainbow by peering into a kaleidoscope.

* * * *

How trade stagnates under these conditions is easy to see. No one can risk a six-months delivery contract in England, for example, without knowing what the pound sterling will be worth six months forward. And who would undertake today to say what a pound will be worth on August 1, 1933? Consider a specific trade bargain, under conditions today, with any country wobbling along on fiat money:

"Ship us 50,000 pairs of shoes in May, and on August 1 we'll pay you 9,000 units," says the potential foreign buyer.

"Units of what?" the American seller asks curiously.

"Units of our currency, of course!"

"Yes, yes; to be sure. But what will a unit of your currency be worth on August 1?"

Here the potential buyer scratches the back of his neck in grave meditation.

"Why," he says at length, "how can I tell you? It all depends * * *"

"Then," suggests the eager American salesman, "will you pay me 36,000 American units, or dollars so-called, on August 1?"

"No! No! No!" the potential buyer exclaims. "How can I tell if I may sell the shoes for that many dollars if our own units change in dollar-value between now and then? Do you want to tie me to a contract that might wipe me out entirely? Is that a way to do business?"

The upshot of this negotiation is, of course, no sale. Buyer and seller have been brought together. One wants what the other offers. But there is no fixed medium of exchange value on which to swing the transaction.

Such is the man-to-man routine in every foreign transaction. It explains why there can be no trade, anywhere, save in terms of a fixed and certain standard of value. Establishment of such a standard must be the beginning in any genuine approach to the rehabilitation of international trade. Reciprocity is an embellishment in the chimney of the house; the first need is to get the water out of the cellar and repair the worm-eaten foundations of stage money.

* * * *

At this writing gold is the only workable standard of international exchange which human history has demonstrated in practical operation. It is at times faulty, cumbersome or inconvenient to busted and defaulting nations; but it works. It moves the goods!

Until the gold standard is restored throughout the world there can be no serious thought of measuring relative values to facilitate trade.

And until there is some considerable trade there can be no serious thought of reciprocal tariffs.

To attempt reciprocity on the quicksands of unanchored currencies the world around, is comparable to undertaking a Chinese juggling performance on a roller-coaster.

Reciprocal tariffs begin where debased currencies end.

Until some universally accepted international standard of value is restored reciprocal trade agreements must be regarded by discerning men as covenants for reciprocal annihilation.

EASTER.

The Lord is risen! See the cave,
The sepulchre St. Joseph gave—
The fast-sealed rock is rolled away,
Come see the place where Jesus lay.
Satan is conquered, and the grave.

Though faith is scorned by fool and knave,
Though thieves may mock and rabbles rave,
Still do we hear the angel say,
"The Lord is risen!"

You who of sin have been the slave,
Be free, for He who came to save
Has conquered death this Easter Day.
Join with the angels as they pray,
Sing with the birds, the wind, the wave,
"The Lord is risen!"

THE AKRON.

Toll the bells for heroes dead
Swallowed in the Ocean's Deep,
While the storm winds guard their bed
Where our gallant comrades sleep.

Leaving home and helpmeets sweet,
Forth they fared into the night—
Facing fog and blinding storm,
Driving forward on their flight.

Never thought they of retreat
While the lightnings flashed around,
While the deep-toned thunder roared,
Shaking sea and air and ground.

Midnight found them far at sea,
Racing onward through the gale,
Trusting to their country's ship,
Hearts that danger could not pale!

Suddenly their summons came:
"Drop the ballast! We are falling!"
"Drive the engines full ahead!"
Came the captain's orders calling.

Halted in its mad descent.
Once again their ship flew on,
Lurching in the tempest's grasp;
But their sands of life were run!

Plunging swiftly, rudder gone,
Duty still remained supreme;
"Stand by for the crash!"
Above the gale the order came.

Then the waters, black and cold,
Swallowed up the ship and crew.
But the story shall be told
How their flag of Duty flew,
'Till the ocean o'er them rolled,
And the Akron sank from view.

Across dim lawns, through peonies and stocks,

Upon your lovely, sun-kissed, verdant hill!
With air of soldier watchfulness, in still
Of night and through each day, you are close by,
A silent guard of destiny. The sigh
Of breeze-blown trees and song of birds e'er fill
The void to chant a requiem, and will
Throughout eternity, o'er heroes nigh.

We walk midst paths so shady-cool, and through
Your aisles to place upon your sacred breast
A flower, and flag of red, and white, and blue;
Your rows of glist'ning white bespeak the test
Of bravery; we pledge our love anew;

Professors in Government Find Realities Disillusioning

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Some of the college professors brought to Washington by the new administration are having an extremely difficult time to adjust their thinking to realities. In the classroom the imagination may soar to transcendental heights and leave students flushed with inspiration. But in Washington these delightful visions of what ought to be come into contact with hard-headed congressmen and practical executives who are not always sympathetic. It is not, therefore, the fault of the professor if his dream falls flat. It is only the stupid, blundering public that does not appreciate the finesse of his art.

A case in point is the grandiose scheme to have the Government mobilize private industry and thus force prosperity upon an unwilling populace. The professors, headed by Assistant Secretary of State Moley, are at work on this idea. They have brought all the constructive idealism of the schoolroom to bear upon the difficult problem of priming industry, and the result is marvelous. All that is necessary is for the Government to take control of the factories and start them to working. What could be simpler? It is amazing what college professors can accomplish when they are given a free hand in a disorganized world.

Apparently the pedagogues were led to this brilliant decision by the process of inductive reasoning. Men are unemployed in all parts of the country. Mills, plants and factories are idle. Many people are dependent upon public and private charity for food and shelter. Jobs must be created. A few billion dollars must be raised to construct public works. But what can be constructed that won't cost the taxpayers more money and thus heap a heavier burden upon industry and discourage private enterprise? It is apparent to the professors that something more is needed. After all the Government can't forever continue to increase its debt to create jobs. Something must be done to put men back to work in their old since business is afraid to move because of the uncertainties involved in the legislative program, let the Government take over all industries and run them for the benefit of the unemployed, including political job-hunters.

Who can say that this collegiate reasoning is fallacious? Uncle Sam might hire Joe Stalin for a few months to get things started, and after that no doubt the professors would be able to run the whole works themselves. Since purchasing power is deficient, it could be augmented by increasing every one's wages and adopting the four-hour day and the three-day week. Think of the thrills that must chase each other down professorial spines when these potential results are envisaged!

Alas! Congress may be hard-headed, the President may be timid and the public may be stupid in these matters. But the professors are patient and persistent. They have not yet given up hope of saving the country.

Talents Revealed in Public Trying Psychological Clinic

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A study and diagnosis of individual capacities has been started in the clinic recently opened in connection with Teachers College, Columbia University. After operating experimentally for some weeks, the clinic was opened to the public for psychological studies of peculiarities which tend to hinder proper development, as well as for the surveying of normal or unusual talents in both children and adults, who wish to learn their particular aptitudes. The work will be carried on in cooperation with similar organizations in the city, and the clinic will take over cases referred to it by the schools, hospitals and courts, in addition to private applicants.

Fourteen examination rooms have been provided and individual cases will be studied by various members of the staff and later reviewed jointly by a conference of examiners. This method, it is believed, in the case of a child having a decided defect in a school subject, for example, would determine the cause of the failing, if it were auditory, inadequate motor control, emotional instability, poor nutrition, unhappy family or social relations, inferior intelligence, negativism toward the teacher, or any one of many such traits which might be overcome when properly understood. Cases found to have a physical disorder as the basis of the maladjustment would be referred to the family physician.

It is the aim of the clinic to make the examination so thorough that all angles of the individuality will be brought out, with the especial purpose in view of revealing "hidden talents." For it is often found that persons who are handicapped with a particular weakness have a special talent in some other line. For persons that seem to have no special defects or talents a series of tests are provided which may bring out an aptitude which the subject could cultivate for his own pleasure or even profit. This examination includes general intelligence tests, educational attainments, musical, athletic and vocational skill gauges.

Free Speech Seen As Safety Valve

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In a letter published in your columns on February 19, Maj. Gen. Amos A. Fries (retired) attributes the attempted assassination of President-elect Roosevelt to the influence of ideas tolerated under our free-speech guarantees. He attacks the American Civil Liberties Union because it advocates the rights of citizens and aliens to utter any and all views without interference except where acts or attempted acts follow.

This is historic American policy. Drawing the line between word and deed was constitutional doctrine in this country up to the World War. It is still sound public policy. It is the safety-valve theory on which the Anglo-Saxon tradition is based. People who commit acts of violence don't make speeches about them. People who may freely air their grievances are far less liable to use violence.

Gen. Fries has responded to the promptings of prejudice in identifying the attempted assassination of Mr. Roosevelt with radical propaganda. The assassin had no connection whatever with radicalism. He was a member of an American Federation of Labor union and a registered voter in the Republican party.

It is plain nonsense to identify acts of assassination with radicals. Every political assassination in the United States and every attempted assassination, with one exception, was the work of a disordered mind, wholly unconnected with any radical or subversive movement.

Misguided patriots of the type of Gen. Fries fail to understand the lessons of American history when they demand repression as a remedy for violence. Repression has always produced violence. Unlimited free speech is the best safety valve of orderly progress.

Too Much Married In U. S. Service

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The daily press carries the item that Mrs. Roosevelt denounces the law which requires dismissals of married workers. First, where both spouses are on the payrolls. With all due respect to the gracious First Lady, whom I respect and admire, I am sure that could she see the true conditions she would support this much-needed law. I am a civil service worker with a family to support. I know of one home in Washington in which a mother, her two married sons, and their wives live all under the same roof. The mother, the two sons and one of the wives are all on the Government pay roll in the same department. There are no children.

Another case, a man on the pay roll at $3,200 and his wife drawing $2,200, both in the same department. Still another, husband drawing $2,400 a year, wife on the D. C. pay roll at $1,800. None of these cases cited have children. Near them lives a man with three little kiddies to feed. He has had no work for a year, and he could do the work that any of these people do.

Is it fair to allow this to continue while children are going hungry, and worse yet, to dismiss men with families with such a condition as this existing?

'Rah for President, Tarheeler Writes

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Our world is in a new era. We have reached the time foreseen by Mother Shipton: "When carriages without horses shall go," &c. The telegraph, the radio, the flying machine, the annihilation of space and time, bring the ends of the earth closer together and we enter into a new era. One of the results is closer intercourse.

Formerly each country thought only of itself. Now, while we are not all of the same family, we are neighbors, and in Leviticus we are told to love our neighbors. We have a world commerce, a world trade. Naturally, there should be a currency adapted for the world use adjusted to our new conditions.

In my youth a citizen of Mexico desirous of purchasing something from us to pay for his purchases could bring either an ounce of gold or 16 ounces of silver. Now he must bring either an ounce of gold or 50 ounces of silver. Mexico having ever been on a silver basis, our commerce with that country is affected. It is the same as to all the other countries that have silver money. Our currency is out of season in this new era. As sensible men, it is our duty to try to live in the world of today, and not cling to the old time that is past.

I note that our new President has called a meeting of foreigners who must realize the need of a world currency, and I feel sure that they will approve the above. Hurrah for our new President!

Bar Flies Appear With Sale of Beer

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: One is reminded of old saloon days by the new generation of "bar flies" already beginning to congregate, with thirsty looks on their faces, around some of the places where beer is being sold. A different atmosphere will soon develop around such establishments, and it will not be one that people will care to have their children come in contact with.

Those who have sampled the new beer say that it produces the first stages of intoxication, a condition which in many persons will create a desire for more and stronger drink. This being the case it should not, under any circumstances, be sold to persons under 21.

Before prohibition the method of dispensing liquor was worked out after long experience and was not based on foolish theories. It was the least offensive that could be devised, and those who talk about "keeping liquor out of politics" and "not permitting the saloon" may be paving the way for something more vicious than anything which has existed before or since prohibtion. The saloon was a ripened fruit of 150 years of the liquor traffic, and any substitute is almost certain, in the long run, to prove worse than the saloon itself.

Gen. Reilly Points Out That Nation Has Been Losing Power Steadily.

Declares Soviet Is Not Now in So Good a Geographical Position as Formerly.

By BRIG. GEN. HENRY J. REILLY, O. R. C.

What military strength has Russia on land, in the air, and at sea?

This is the question being asked in every capital of Asia and Europe, from Tokyo and Peiping in the Far East to Rome, Paris and London in the West.

It is of interest to the average American for two reasons.

First, because there are increasing signs that the present situation in eastern Asia may lead to a second Russo-Japanese war. Whether or not such a war will spread into another world war will largely depend upon whether Russia will display such weakness that she will be rapidly beaten, or such strength that more and more of the nations of the world will be drawn in on one side or the other.

The second reason is that our Government in Washington today is wrestling with the question of whether or not Russia should be recognized.

The principal argument for recognition is that a strong Russia would furnish an effective counterpoise to Japan in eastern Asia, and thus lessen the danger of a war between Japan and this country.

Would Strengthen Russia.

The strongest argument against recognition is that it would tend to strengthen Russia, and thus help her propagate Communism, of which she is the home; her government being the only Communistic one in the world.

She made an effort in 1920 to spread this doctrine by force of arms. She began it with the invasion of Poland at a time when Communistic outbreaks were going on in Germany; had just been suppressed in Hungary and were imminent in Italy. Europe shudders yet when it thinks by what a narrow margin the Poles stopped this plan by decisively defeating the Russians on the plains of the Vistula in the hot August days of 1920.

Lord d'Abernon, the British ambassador to Berlin, in Warsaw on a special mission at that time, has aptly named the Battle of the Vistula the eighteenth decisive battle of the world.

The fundamental basis of any country's military strength has always been its geographical position. Its strategy, that is, what it can do on the defensive or offensive in war, on land and sea, depends upon this. While our new arm, aviation, by its ability to annihilate distance is perhaps not so dependent upon it as our old type armies and navies, its war uses are also greatly affected by geographical conditions. Mountains, deserts and oceans are not only obstacles but also greatly affect weather conditions, which after all control air movement in a way unknown to the old type of armies and navies.

Land Possessions.

Just as the strength of Britain has risen or fallen dependent upon her control of the sea, so the strength of Russia, the world's greatest continuous land power, has depended primarily upon her land possessions.

Just as Britain used sea power to expand from a small second-rate state in the days of Queen Elizabeth to the greatest colonial empire in the world, so has Russia, in a little more than the same time, expanded from the small inland principality of Muscovy to the greatest continuous land power. She stretches across two continents, from the Pacific Coast of eastern Asia to the Baltic in Europe.

However, Russia's rulers, starting with Peter the Great, have always realized that no matter how much of inland Europe and Asia she absorbed she remained cut off from the world as a whole, unless she had access to the sea. Therefore, they have always endeavored along with their land expansion to enlarge the window on the sea which Peter gave her by taking some of the Baltic provinces from Sweden, thus starting the downfall of that country from its position as a dominant European power.

From then one, while checked again and again, Russia steadily increased her land holdings and her sea coast until the Russo-Japanese War of 1904 and 1905 finished her sea power through the virtual destruction of her war fleet.

First, her Asiatic fleet was beaten in battle a short distance at sea from the fortress of Port Arthur. This was followed by the defeat of her European fleet, when, months later, nearly at the end of its long voyage from the Baltic, Admiral Togo fought and destroyed it in the Straits of Tsushima.

Were Not Carried Out.

The Great War, which Russia started on the side of the ultimate victors, the allies, would have greatly increased her territory had the promises made in the various secret treaties been carried out. Instead, however, Russia came out a smaller land and sea power than when she entered the Great War in 1914. The central powers who made peace with her after the Communist revolution treated her as a beaten enemy. They therefore cut down her territory along the Baltic and in central Europe. The allies considered she had abandoned them; also they treated the Communist government as an enemy. Therefore in the various treaties of peace they did not hesitate, without consulting Russia, to cut still further down her territory by recognizing the new Baltic states and Poland.

The struggle to reach and enlarge her seacoast has been the primary cause of most of Russia's wars with first-class European powers and Japan. Because of it she has fought Turkey more than once in Europe. Because of it she has fought Britain once in Europe. She was repeatedly on the verge of fighting her in Asia as well, until the rise of Germany caused them temporarily to forget their differences. This new power, efficient and aggresive, threatened both on land and sea—Russia, primarily on the first; Britain, primarily on the second.

Remained Blocked Up.

Russia increased her Baltic seacoast at the expense of Sweden and Poland until, face to face with Germany, she had to stop on land. Then the rise of Germany as a military sea power in the decade prior to the Russo-Japanese war of 1904-05 blocked her use of that sea as a pathway to the world's seven oceans. And so she remained blocked up to the time when the Great War broke out in 1914.

Russia fought her way around both shores of the Black Sea at the expense of the Turk. Once her armies were almost in sight of the mosque of St. Sohpia, formerly the Christian Cathedral of Constantinople, when the concert of Europe (Britain, France, Prussia and Austria), stopped her.

She had hoped, expected and been promised that the Great War would open the Bosphorus, the Sea of Marmora and the Dardanelles to her, thus finally giving her an outlet into the Mediterranean. But here, as in the Baltic, the end of the Great War found her farther away from her objective.

Russia's desire to reach the Persian Gulf and the Indian Ocean brought her repeatedly into diplomatic conflict with Britain in Persia and in Afghanistan, once her expansion south and east of the Caspian Sea had brought her to the frontiers of these two central Asian countries.

Her agreements with Britain, when they finally decided Germany was a common enemy, practically gave her the northern half of Persia.

Events during the Great War and since have pushed Russia back out of Persia and established a regime in Afghanistan unfriendly to her. Both the Persian and Afghanistan governments, while not officially allied, are certainly in complete agreement with Britain, as against Russia.

Her march into Manchuria, followed by her seizure of Port Arthur and the rest of the Liaotung Peninsula and her subsequent reaching into Korea, brought on the first Russo-Japanese War, that of 1904-5. This war drove her from her foothold on the China Sea and left her only Vladivostok, on the Sea of Japan.

For years there have been numerous indications that, having brought Mongolia under her influence, Russia would again seek an outlet on the China Sea, this time by way of Jehol, Kalgan, Peiping and Tientsin, or the northern part of Chili province.

Japan's recent seizure of Jehol not only keeps Russia out but also puts Japan in a good position to seize Kalgan, Peiping, and Tientsin herself.

Thus, beginning with the first Russo-Japanese War of 1904-5, Russia's sea coast has been diminishing and her land area on her frontiers decreasing.

Less Favorable Position.

Therefore, she is not in as favorable geographical position to wage war as she was when Britain and Japan feared her in Asia and when France and Germany sought her as an ally the last decade of the nineteenth and first of the twentieth centuries.

It is true that just as the central powers in 1914-18 by their central geographical position kept the allies separated from each other, Russia similarly separates Japan and Britain from each other in Asia, and both from their friends on the continent of Europe.

However, she can not take advantage of this position effectively to swing her troops from one front to another on short interior lines as did the central powers, while her opponents have to use much longer exterior land and water ones, as was true of the allies. This for several reasons. In the first place, central powers only had hundreds of miles to cover, whereas Russia must cover them by the thousands. The central powers were covered by a network of railways. Russia is not. This is particularly true of that part in Asia.

Through many years both the railway and military staffs and personnel of the central powers had been trained to the quick, efficient transport of large numbers of troops and huge quantities of supplies. The Russians have no such effective organizations.

The more the question is examined, the more evident it is that, far from Russia being in a strong geographical position with respect to warring on her European and Asiatic neighbors, and particularly Japan, she is in a weak one.

In fact, her position is so weak geographically that she is decidedly open to successful attack by sea, in the air, and on land, both in Europe and Asia.

AMBASSADOR IS POPULAR

De La Boulaye, Well Groomed, Is Welcome Guest of Paris Smart Set.

Paris, April 15 (A.P.).—Andre Lefebre de la Boulaye, who has replaced the retiring poetical Paul Claudel as French Ambassador in Washington, is a brilliant conversationalist and esteemed as of the highest type of French diplomat.

His task will be to settle the war debt question and create a better feeling for France in the United States.

A personal friendship with President Roosevelt, knowledge of American affairs and a fluent command of English recommended M. de la Boulaye when a successor to M. Claudel came up for consideration. His wife, the former Mary Hely d'Oissel speaks English as well as her husband, and is equally at home in an American atmosphere.

He twice served in Washington, becoming acquainted with President Roosevelt when the latter was Assistant Secretary of the Navy.

This friendship has been maintained. On a trip to Paris a year ago the President and M. de la Boulaye renewed Washington memories.

An elegantly groomed man of 57 years, who looks much younger, M. de la Boulaye, is a welcome guest in Paris salons. His ability to discuss affairs of wide import has brought him renown in smart circles.

He comes from a family of diplomats, writers and politicians and entered the foreign service in 1898 after leaving school. His first assignment was in Bucharest. Later he was sent to the Vatican, Berlin, Moscow and Washington. Since 1927 he has been in the Quai d'Orsay, first as assistant director for American affairs and then as assistant director for political affairs, both high posts.

He is a commander of the Legion of Honor.

Young Moorish Aristocrats Form "Sacrificed Generation"

Tangier, Morocco, April 15 (A.P.).—The mystery of the Mussulman religion comes hard to a faction of young Moorish aristocrats who call themselves "the sacrificed generation."

These young men refuse to marry the high caste Moorish girls who would ordinarily become their unseen brides because, the young men assert, the girls have not kept pace with the progress of their men. Religion, meanwhile, keeps the young men from marrying Europeans. Hence they have adopted the name, the "sacrificed generation."

But even the most vehement of the young progressives admit they have a pretty good time of it. Educated in the various European schools established in the international zone, and thereafter occupying well-paid government posts, they are able to view and enjoy life from a somewhat broader point of view than their subjugated kinsmen.

They are easily selected from among their brethren. If a tourist sees a spic and span Moor wandering down the street on feet shod in Oxford brogues, with flashy socks and garters half hiding legs bound at the knee by the usual Moorish pantaloon, he may be reasonably certain he is looking at a member of the "sacrificed" clan.

If the native stroller wears a fez with a crown more than 3 inches high and turns into any one of the hundreds of cafes and cabarets, the tourist may be sure he has located his "sacrificed" quarry.

Ordinary Moors wear "babuchas," or goat's hide sandals, the low-crowned fez, and do not frequent cafes.

The greatest kick put up by the "sacrificed generation" is that nice Moorish girls still wear all-concealing veils before their prospective husbands. They hold there is no justice, Mussulman or otherwise, in a situation which gives the women all the advantage of previous sizing up.

EASTER DAY

By EDGAR A. GUEST

They thought Him dead who saw Him die,
But that first bright Easter Day
Frightened Mary drawing nigh
Found Death's great stone rolled away.

They who saw Him crucified
Wept to see His body torn,
Certain that the Christ had died
'Til that first glad Easter morn.

Doubt and dread and dismal gloom
Terrified the minds of men
Until Mary at the tomb
Found that He had risen again.

Hope and faith and courage smiled
Out of skies long dark and gray,
He, whom scoffers had reviled,
Unto life had led the way!

Alleluia! now we sing.
Death all mortals can defy.
This the truth He came to bring:
All shall live who seem to die.

Boys' Americanisms Deplored in England

Wallasey, England, April 15 (A.P.).—Youths here who use "Americanisms" have drawn the ire of Wallasey's chief constable, John Ormerod.

He said in his annual police report: "I can not refrain from commenting adversely on the pernicious and growing habit of these youths to use Americanisms with nasal accompaniment in order to appear, in their own vernacular, 'tough guys.'

"On one of my officers going to search him a young housebreaker told him to 'lay off, cop,' and 'Oh, yeah' is a frequent answer to charges. We are promised with being 'bumped off.'"

War Homes Project Costly to Australia

Canberra, April 15 (A.P.).—It now is admitted that the Australian plan to provide former service men with homes has been a ghastly financial blunder.

At a cost of $144,000,000 the federal government built 21,220 homes for soldiers who promised to buy them by installments.

Many of the homes never have been occupied, some have disappeared from where they were erected and others have been wrecked.

Government sources say this "war homes" scheme has been one of the main factors in endangering the Australian finances.

Wine Dealer's Gift Church Long Empty

Edinburgh, April 15 (A.P.).—The Reid Memorial Church here, most ornate in Scotland, is empty several years after its construction.

It was built at a cost of nearly $250,000 and generously endowed under the will of the late William Cramb Reid, wine merchant, as a memorial to his father, who also was in the wine business.

The Church of Scotland has not accepted the building.

Reid's sole stipulation in leaving money for the memorial was that the building should be magnificent.

Geography Stressed

Rome, April 15 (A.P.).—Two universities, devoted solely to study of geography and allied subjects, will be opened by the government, one here and the other in Genoa. The course will be two years, for students who have had two years of university science.

Rome Buys Single Smokes.

Rome, April 15 (A.P.).—Slot machines to sell single cigarettes to persons who do not wish to, or can not, buy a whole package are being considered by the government tobacco monopoly.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Romance May Be Discovered In Boating on Potomac River

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: April is the beginning of the boating season, and I wonder how many stand or drive along the Speedway and enviously watch the boats as they pass, chugging, sputtering or purring along as the case may be. Perhaps yachting is for the wealthy, but the real adventure of boating can be enjoyed by anyone who has a yearning for it.

Just about a year ago there were three of us leaning against the rail along the Speedway looking out over the river as far as we could see, and wondering what was just around the bend. It was then that we decided to purchase a boat. A caucus was held on the spot and an inventory of our several estates showed that there was approximately $200 which could be allocated to this new enterprise.

A rather extensive search was begun for some sort of craft that would fit the price. Starting with Georgetown we clambered down under the old canal and wandered about. It was not long before we found a small craft, and climbing aboard we examined every detail, and, of course, speculated on her value. However, unlike the perfect story, the price was beyond our limited amount of cash and our search continued from place to place among the many wharves and boathouses along the Potomac and the Eastern Branch. Anyone with $400 or $500 to spend would have no trouble finding a boat to suit his fancy. There are literally hundreds tied up along the river, and most of them are for sale.

Down along the banks of the Anacostia River, just above the Navy Yard, stand a few shacks which constitute a boat yard, and there we found boats of every description. I think we must have examined and inquired the price of every one. While talking to a man who was apparently an authority around the place, we noticed a small boat moving slowly up the river. It was under power, very audibly so, although from its appearance it was a sailboat as well.

To describe her in proper technical language would be impossible, for she was unlike anything I have ever seen. She had a very salty air about her, and in a second we knew that she was the boat we wanted. Before she berthed we had found that the owner was willing to sell and that the price was well under the figure we had set as our limit. Negotiations were immediately undertaken, and almost before we had an opportunity to really determine what we were buying, the craft was ours and had been registered in our names in Baltimore.

Basically she was a metal life-boat hull converted into what can best be called a motor-sailor. She was about 26 feet long, 8-foot beam, with a 4-foot bowsprit and a 15-foot mast. Her power consisted of a 1-cylinder, 2-cycle Detroit Marine engine, driving a 16-16 weedless wheel. About 6 feet from the stern, and running about 5 feet more forward, was a small cabin about 14 inches high. Every other inch of her from bow to stern was decked over, except that just aft of the mast, which was stepped about 5 feet from the bow, was a good-sized hatch. Below and forward were two bunks, and scattered here and there below decks were makeshift cabinets and shelf space. Beneath one of her bunks we found her canvas, mainsail with an attempt at a gaffrig, and a balloon gib apparently made for a much larger craft.

That is about what we found ourselves with, and while we then knew something of what we had purchased of a material nature, we were certainly in the dark as to what the summer held in store for us in the way of experiences and adventures. If there is anyone in Washington who does not believe there is romance to be found within 100 miles—just let him buy a boat.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The announcement that the narcotic limitation convention of 1931 has now received the support of a sufficient number of nations to insure its going into effect on July 10 is welcome news that will make for the welfare of humanity throughout the world. In this country the manufacture and sale of all narcotic drugs are under strict regulation, with production closely limited to medicinal needs. Opium and many other similar drugs, including the newer synthetic products, are manufactured in heavy excess of local requirements in various countries, and the new international regulations will be of great assistance in controlling illicit traffic.

It was necessary that the treaty be acceded to or ratified by twenty-five nations, including eight specified as producing nations. The number has been exceeded, and it is probable that at least thirty-five adherents will have affixed their signatures within a short time. The manufacturing nations that have joined the treaty agreement are Great Britain, France, the United States, Germany and Turkey.

American regulations, enforced by a special agency, are probably sufficient to meet all requirements of the treaty, and the extension of stricter supervision abroad will be of great assistance in preventing smuggling into this country.

The official report to the State Department shows that the treaty includes control of the distribution of codein, a derivative of opium, which heretofore has not come within the scope of the international opium conventions. It also brings under strict regulation substances which may be chemically morphine, heroin, cocaine and like products, even though they are not derived from either opium or coca leaves. The provisions of the treaty are made to apply not only to these known habit-forming drugs, but to new ones which may be developed.

Westminster Seats Are to Be Increased

London, April 15 (A.P.).—A large monument of a chief justice of England in the eighteenth century will be moved from a prominent place in Westminister Abbey to make room for more seats.

First suggestions were that the monument commemorating William Murray, Earl of Mansfield, erstwhile lord chief justice, might be presented to some responsible institution outside the abbey. Later it was decided to merely move it down the floor of the abbey to the less conspicuous north door. In that way 86 seats for worshipers will be added to the north transept.

The huge marble memorial depicts the chief justice seated in a chair, wearing full-bottomed wig and robes of office. He is supported by a more than life-sized justice, with scales, and a Britannia, with helmet and shield. Also on the pedestal are a mortuary urn, the coat of arms of the Mansfield family, a sword crossed with an object resembling a legal scroll, earl's coronet and a handsome inscription.

Complaints have been made that the statuary in the abbey interferes with vision, seating capacity and lighting. It also distracts from religious contemplation, it was complained.

Pig-Charcoal Trade Is Basis for Treaty

Budapest, April 15 (A.P.).—Hungary and Czechoslovakia, after two years without a trade treaty, have negotiated a barter pact.

The Czechs will send 20,000 cars of firewood, charcoal and lumber to Hungary, and the latter country will export 2,100 cars of wheat and 30,000 pigs to its northern neighbor.

Further applying the system of barter, the two countries have agreed that the amount of Czech currency which Hungarians are permitted to take to watering places in the Tatra Mountains shall be covered by equivalent imports of Hungarian products by Czechoslovakia.

British Thrift Grows

London, April 15 (A.P.).—Every fourth person in the British Isles has become a depositor in the Postal Savings Bank, there being 10,000,000 on the books, with accounts averaging close to $100 each. In addition the bank holds $666,000,000 in government securities for 1,500,000 of its depositors.

Flood Records Sought

Bagdad, April 15 (A.P.).—Searching for evidence as to whether the great flood of Assyrian records was the deluge for which Noah built the Ark, the Oxford-Field Museum expedition, which has been digging at Kish for 12 years, has moved to nearby Barghuthiat, supposedly the site of the lost city of Agada.

Protestants Unite For Missions Drive

New York, April 15 (A.P.).—For the first time in the history of Protestant foreign missions 39 of the denominations are planning a united, countrywide campaign to lay the facts of the missionary program before church members.

It will be an answer, Dr. A. L. Warnshuis, secretary of the International Missionary Council, says, to the challenge flung before them by the laymen's foreign missions inquiry.

The report of that group demanded increased cooperation as a basis for the cotninued support of the enterprise.

"The primary purpose of the campaign will be to educate people regarding the opportunity and need in all parts of the world for an extension of the missionary movement," Dr. Warnshuis declared.

"There can be no hope for a world of peace until men everywhere are converted to Christianity.

"While we talk about plans—most of them futile—for preventing conflicts, there are much more powerful forces working inevitably to bring about war.

"The salesmanship of the munition manufacturers, the economic rivalries, the nationalistic spirit—these are some of the things that are dragging us toward more turmoil.

"Missions are by far the strongest force working for peace."

The first phase of the campaign will get under way on the Wednesday after Easter, Dr. Warnshuis said, when a team of mission work leaders will begin a series of two-day meetings in 15 of the principal cities.

Dr. Stanley Jones, prominent missionary and author, will head the group.

In September a more extensive drive will start.

Gas Masks Ordered For Italian Civilians

Milan, April 15 (A.P.).—Factories here have filled an order for 2,000,000 gas masks to be sold to the public as a safety measure.

The government recently authorized sale of the masks and free distribution to persons whose duty would oblige them to remain in military zones in time of war.

Mosques Face Closing

Angora, April 15 (A.P.).—A survey of mosques is convincing the Turkish government that many places of worship should be closed under a new law calling for abandonment of mosques which remain empty during any one of the five daily calls to prayer. Many of Istanbul's 514 mosques probably will be sealed.

Viking Art Displayed

Koenigsberg, East Prussia, April 15 (A.P.).—Viking swords, armor and jewels, found in a burial place in Wiskiauten on the Baltic Sea shore, are shown in a new department of the Prussian Museum here.

Dr. Carlton J. H. Hayes, also of Columbia University, will present a paper on the "Attitudes of Nations in Regard to International Cooperation." The Rev. Joseph F. Thorning, S. J., of St. Louis University, will read a paper on "Cooperation With Europe."

Present Obligations.

The Rev. Dr. John A. Ryan, of Catholic University, will present two papers, one on the principles of international cooperation, and the other on the present obligations of international cooperation.

Other speakers for the first day will be William F. Roemer, of Notre Dame University; the Rev. Edgar Schmiedeler, O. S. B.; William F. Montavon, of Washington, and Elizabeth M. Lynskey, of Hunter College.

The conference will open tomorrow morning with a round table discussion. The Rev. Francis J. Haas, director of the National Catholic Service School, Washington, will act as chairman. Capital Minister Writes Of Bible Lands' Empires

A series of articles titled "Vanished Empires and Buried Cities in Bible Lands," written by M. B. Lambin, former president of the Presbyterian Ministers Association, 3534 Park place northwest, will be published in the Christian Observer, Louisville, Ky.

The first article was published in the issue of March 21.

'Follies' Girl

Of Another Day Is "Saved" From "Drudgery" of French Home.

Lagny, France, April 15 (A.P.).—Mrs. Ethel Robeen Coval, 38, former Ziegfeld "Follies" girl, was accompanied today to this town, 20 miles east of Paris, from the nearby home of Rene Pettijean by gendarmes. They went there yesterday in response to a letter she wrote saying she was unable to leave the place.

The gendarmerie took a statement from her in which she alleged she was forced to be a household drudge instead of leading an anticipated life of romance in the woodland home.

Petitjean also made a statement. He asserted Mrs. Coval was free to leave and attributed her allegations to hysteria.

These were sent to Public Prosecutor Terrier at Meaux, the department seat. Mrs. Coval refused to file a complaint.

Mrs. Coval told the gendarmes she came to France in January, expecting Petitjean, a former commercial agent in New York City, to marry her. She said the romance was blasted. An investigation began after she sent a letter to her former husband, Charles E. Coval, of New York.

Mrs. Coval's maiden name was Robeen. She appeared in the "Follies" before her marriage.

D. A. R. Hosts Are Gathering in Washington Today For Opening of 42d Annual Continental Congress

Delegates of 150,000 American Women Will Have Crowded Week; Mrs. Roosevelt to Attend; Memorial Services Planned.

By ELISABETH E. POE.

Several thousand delegates, representing more than 150,000 patriotic American women of the national society, Daughters of the American Revolution, will come to Washington this week to participate in the forty-second annual Continental Congress, held in Constitution Hall.

Mrs. Russell William Magna, of Holyoke, Mass., the president general, will preside over all sessions of the congress. Present during the week likewise will be the honorary presidents general, including Mrs. Lowell Fletcher Hobart, of Ohio; Mrs. Grace Lincoln Hall Brosseau, of Greenwich, Conn.; Mrs. George Thacher Guernsey, of Independence, Kans., and Mrs. George Maynard Minor, of New London, Conn.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, wife of the President, will be present at one of the sessions. President Roosevelt was unable to avail himself of the invitation to address the congress because of the pressure of State affairs. The officers and delegates to the congress will be received at the White House by President and Mrs. Roosevelt, Friday, at 3:30 p. m.

Contrary to the usual custom, the sessions of the congress will close on Friday instead of Saturday this year. The final function will be the annual banquet at the Willard Hotel Friday night when the president general and officers will be feted by the delegates.

Services at Cathedral.

The D. A. R. official banner will be placed in the Great Choir and Sanctuary of Washington Cathedral tomorrow at a special service at 5 p. m. to be attended by the national officers of the D. A. R. and the delegates. The Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washnigton, will accept the banner and deliver an address.

More than 200 lovely American girls and representing every State in the Union will act as pages during the congress.

Among the speakers on the comprehensive program prepared under the direction of former Representative Ruth Bryan Owen, chairman, and Mrs. G. Wallace W. Hanger, vice chairman, will be Miss Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor, and Mrs. Amelia Earhart Putnam, famous flier. Other prominent men and women on the program are Mrs. Josiah A. Van Orsdel, national president of the Children of the American Revolution; Frederick W. Millspaugh, president general of the Sons of the American Revolution; Representative Edith Nourse Rogers, Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace, Maj. Gen. Stephen O. Fuqua, chief of Infantry, U. S. A.; the Rev. Dr. Edmund A. Walsh, vice president of Georgetown University; Rear Admiral Wat Tyler Cluverius, U. S. N., and Seth W. Richardson, Assistant Attorney General.

Large Patriotic Gifts.

The attendance is expected to be less than usual this year. Reports of large gifts by the States, however, to the cause of patriotic education, students' loans and to schools approved by the D. A. R. for assistance, show much constructive work has been accomplished during the last year despite the financial stringency.

This is not a year of triennial elections so political excitement is concentrated around the selection of seven vice presidents general for which there are more than that number of candidates. The District of Columbia D. A. R. has put forward a candidate for this office in Miss Helen Harman, former State regent, and the prospects for her election are very bright. The other candidates for the posts of vice president general include Mrs. John C. Coulter, of South Carolina; Mrs. Howard Bailey, of Missouri; Mrs. L. R. Spencer, of Nebraska; Mrs. Victor L. Warren, of Maine; Mrs. John W. Kirkpatrick, of Kansas, and Mrs. James Trottman, of Wisconsin.

There are also two vacancies in the position of honorary vice president general, in many ways the highest honor that can come to a member, for it is awarded solely for outstanding service to the organization.

This year there are three candidates for the two offices, all of them leading figures in the society for many years. These women are Mrs. John Laidlaw Buel, of Connecticut; Mrs. James T. Morris, of Minnesota, and Mrs. Cassius C. Cottle, of California.

Today impressive memorial services will be held for the 2,379 members who have died since the last Congress in April, 1932. One of these was Mrs. William Cumming Story, honorary president general of the D. A. R., a native of New York State and prominent in national defense work throughout the Nation.

The memorial service will be held in Memorial Continental Hall at 2:45 p. m. and will be conducted by Mrs. Raymond G. Kimbell, chaplain general of the society.

Instead of a floral tribute a large cross festooned with candles is to be placed on the platform and as tributes are paid to the dead the candles on the cross will be lighted. The tributes will be paid to each group by a member of the society with the same classification.

Mrs. Magna, president general of the society, will light the "candle of loving remembrance" in memory of Mrs. Story, and in her tribute will also eulogize the deceased members in a body. Following this Mrs. Kimbell will lead the daughters in the Lord's Prayer.

Mrs. Howard L. Hodgkins will speak in behalf of the deceased charter members, three of whom were members of chapters in the District of Columbia. The daughters from the District who were charter members and who have died since last year include Mrs. A. G. Wilkinson, of the Our Flag Chapter, and Miss Virginia Miller and Mrs. A. C. Janin, of the Mary Washington Chapter. The other deceased charter members are Mrs. Henry M. Shephard, of the Kaskaskia Chapter, Ill.; Mrs. Porter King, Atlanta Chapter, Ga., and Mrs. John J. Glessner, of the Chicago Chapter, Ill.

Mrs. Alexander Ennis Patton will deliver a tribute to the deceased honorary vice presidents general, Mrs. Wallace Delafield, of St. Louis Chapter, Illinois, and Mrs. Julius J. Estey, of the Brattleboro Chapter, Missouri, and Mrs. Charles E. Herrick will speak on the deceased former vice presidents general, Mrs. Chalmers M. Williamson, of the Ralph Hemphreys Chapter, Mississippi, Mrs. A. Howard Hinkle, of the Cincinnati Chapter, Ohio, and Mrs. Harold R. Howell, of the Abigail Adams Chapter, Iowa.

Deceased National Officers.

Two prominent former national officers who died since the last congress are Miss Elizabeth Pierce, of the Constitution Chapter, of the District of Columbia, who served as recording secretary general and later chaplain general, and Miss Margaret Bright Barnett, of the Pittsburgh Chapter, Pennsylvania, who was corresponding secretary general in the last administration. Tributes to Miss Pierce and Miss Barnett will be given by Mrs. Gains M. Brumbaugh.

Mrs. Henry Zoller, jr., will speak of Mrs. Annie Elizabeth Thomas Lilburn, who at her death was State regent of Maryland, and Mrs. Robert J. Reed will pay tribute to the deceased former regents, including Mrs. Robert H. Pearson, of the Old Eylton Chapter; Mrs. Arthur S. Buchanan, of the Hermitage Chapter, Tennessee; Mrs. Ernest Vincent Nicholl, of the Jacksonville Chapter, Florida; Mrs. Justus R. Friedline, Kinnikinnik Chapter, Colorado; Mrs. Clinton H. Moore, of the Silver Bow Chapter, Montana; Mrs. Marshall H. Coolidge, of the Monument Chapter, Minnesota, and Mrs. Mary Montague Perry Allen, of the Spirit of Liberty Chapter, Utah.

The national convention of the Children of the American Revolution will open in the Red Cross Building Tuesday with a pageant of flags from the 18 States that have presented their colors to the National Society.

"Feeder" for Parent Groups.

Later a flag will be presented from the State of Delaware by Margaret P. Scott, of Wilmington.

Mrs. J. A. Van Orsdel, the national president, will give her annual report and introduce speakers who will give greetings from the Allied Patriotic Societies, or parent societies, the Daughters of the American Revolution and the Sons of the American Revolution.

Story of Society's Founding.

The society was founded by Mrs. Harriet M. Lothrop, author of the "Little Peppers" and many other children's stories. She lived within sight of Concord Bridge in a patriotic setting and her home was Longfellow's Wayside Inn. In searching for a historic incident to become the keynote, Mrs. Lothrop discovered that Washington, through his love of children, had furnished a perfect one.

Mrs. Charles Alexander Sinclair will be elected the new president. The pilgrimages will come last, during which the newly elected officers will take their oath under the tree the children planted at Mount Vernon 35 years ago.

Mrs. James Shera Montgomery, of this city, who is musical director for the Forty-second Continental Congress, will open the congress tomorrow with a half-hour organ recital. LABOULAYE GIVEN HEARTY WELCOME

(Associated Press.)

The envoy called at the White House to make formal presentation of his credentials. He and Mr. Roosevelt have known one another since the days of the great war when one was Assistant Secretary of the Navy and the other was a secretary at the French Embassy here. They have met in France since.

The ambassador told the President he was happy to have the cooperation of old friends in handling the relations between the United States and his government, which, he said, are of "capital importance" under the circumstances through which the world is now passing.

"I share fully your opinion that in the present world crisis the relations between our two great republics are necessarily of high importance," the President replied. "To the task of conducting these relations on a plane of mutual benefit to France, to the United States and to the world, your friendships here, your knowledge of this country, of its problems, and your vast experience in the problems facing the rest of the world, make you peculiarly well fitted. You and the government of France will find this Government dedicated to this same task with the most cordial and sympathetic cooperation.

"The high responsibility which today is intrusted to all in authority, in the interest of lightening the burdens which depress the world, will be found reflected in this cooperation.

"My welcome to you in your new and exalted position is not only a personal one; it is a welcome to an old friend from the Government and the entire people of this country."

The new ambassador replaced Paul Claudel, who becomes ambassador at Brussels.

The tonnage for the year showed a decrease from 29,417,000 net tons in 1931 to 26,647,000 in 1932. London held second place with 20,143,000 tons, a decrease of 6.9 per cent from 1931. Hamburg was third and Antwerp fourth.

Kansas Courts to Get Real Beer Sale Test

Wichita, Kans., April 15 (A.P.).—A test of the legality of 3.2 per cent beer under the Kansas dry law got under way today with the arrest of Robert Andrews, 28, on a charge of selling intoxicating liquor in vending the new brew.

Andrews' attorneys arranged for the sale and the arrest. They said they "would like to have the case heard next week if possible." Andrews was freed under $1,000 bond. Near beer is legal in Kansas.

Brew Racketeer Inquiry Ordered

(Associated Press.)

The Bureau of Industrial Alcohol is keeping a close scrutiny on the persons into whose hands brewery permits fall and has ordered a broad investigation into reports that permits in New Jersey have gone into the possession of racketeers.

Commissioner Doran said yesterday he had received letters lending credence to reports that racketeers had succeeded in opening several breweries in northern New Jersey.

The question came to light as a result of the murder of a man in Elizabeth this week on whose body a beer permit was found. Judge William Clark, of New Jersey, who turned over to Doran considerable information dealing with the case, said here yesterday that the breweries involved had been in litigation in his courts for many months "and the men operating them were racketeers of the worst sort."

Family Vanishes To Beat Doctors

Hastings-on-Hudson, N. Y., April 15 (A.P.).—Leaving their home in the early dawn, without telling any one where they were going, the family of John Vasco had disappeared tonight, adding another strange circumstance to the events rising out of the attempt to remove a tumor from the eye of 2-year-old Helen Vasco.

Some neighbors of the family said Vasco, his wife and three children—Mary, 11, and the twins, Helen and Anna—had left their home at 5 a. m. and gone off in an automobile. Others said the Vascos trudged away on foot. No one, however, knew where they went, or why.

Mrs. Vasco has opposed the plan to remove a tumor on the retina of Helen's left eye, which, doctors said, will cause her death if left to grow. Yesterday the father said he would sanction the operation, but today William Birch, who lives next door to the Vascos, was quoted as saying the father told him he was "not going to have any doctors."

INDIANS WILL SHOW CRAFTS TO SHOPPERS

An exhibition of Indian crafts of the Southwest, in which seven Pueblo and Navajo craftsmen will be seen at work under the sponsorship of Wick Miller, Indian trader, of San Ysidro, N. Mex., will be presented all this week on the fourth floor of Woodward & Lothrop's, beginning tomorrow and continuing through Saturday.

The Indians will be at work from 10 a. m. until 5 p. m. each day. Mr. Miller will give three lectures each day, at 10:30 a. m., 2 p. m. and 4:45 p. m.

The group of workers includes Kahl-Nez, silversmith; Ee-Yani, potter; Pesh-Depah, blanket weaver; Sa-Muh, bead maker; Alkin-Zos-Pah, Hlueel-Pah and Dineh-Slapaheh, ceremonial leader, who makes sand paintings.

These Indians represent 65,000 people in New Mexico and Arizona. The Navajos are the largest single tribe of Indians in the United States. The Pueblos are not one tribe, but a number of tribes, all of which live in houses.

Pueblo is a Spanish word, meaning town, and is used in referring to eight tribes who talk eight different languages and who live in 26 towns and villages. The Navajos went into the Southwest from the North about 500 years ago.

The Indians to be seen working in Woodward & Lothrop's are not princesses or chiefs, but seven persons doing the things that they do every day at home.

Colorado Smoking Hills Draw Visitors

Marshall, Colo., April 15 (A.P.).—The smoking hills of Marshall are attracting public attention after 50 years of puffing and blowing about themselves.

Prof. Philip C. Worcester, of the University of Colorado geology department, believes the fires probably are of the same origin as those under old Carbon Mountain at Durango, which is disintegrating. Since the Durango alarums many people have visited Marshall's smoky show.

Hijackers Loot Truck Of Its $10,000 Cargo

Chicago, April 15 (A.P.).—Three hijackers took a truckload of cigarettes valued at $10,000 today from Crayton Cook, of Indianapolis, an employe of the Griffin Truck Co.

He told police the robbers forced his truck to the curb on the South Side and that two of them drove him about the city for three hours. The third man drove away with the truck. The robbers told Cook to look at a downtown street corner for his truck. He did, and found it there.

U. S. BOTTLE DRIFTS TO NORWAY'S COAST

A drift bottle released by the Commerce Department's Bureau of Fisheries off the New England coast April 21, 1931, in an effort to determine how the drift of ocean currents affect certain species of commercial fishes, has just been returned to Washington after having been recovered near Hammerfest, Norway, approximately 4,550 miles distant from the place of release.

The bottle was adrift 683 days when it was recovered by a Norwegian fisherman in a small bay near Hammerfest. It is believed that this is a record distance for a drift bottle set out in the interest of science.

The bottle was liberated from the Bureau of Fisheries steamer Albatross II on southern Georges Bank. It was one of several hundred set adrift to determine the effect of surface water currents on the drift of fish eggs and larvae in the region of the Gulf of Maine.

Records of other bottles released on Georges Bank show that some have been picked up on the Irish coast. One was picked up on the coast of the Shetland Islands.

A record kept by returned bottles indicates a drift schedule of 515 days from Georges Bank to Ireland, 562 days to Scotland and 582 days to the Shetland Isles.

It was pointed out in the Bureau that bottles returned from such great distances have but little value from the standpoint of the fishery. They merely show that some of the eggs spawned on Georges Bank drift out into the Gulf Stream and perhaps hatch far out at sea, where no food is available for little fish.

Foreign Securities Board Is Proposed

(Associated Press.)

The bill creating a "foreign securities board" to pass on all foreign loans floated in this country was favorably reported to the Senate Judiciary Committee yesterday by a subcommittee headed by Senator McCarran (Democrat), Nevada.

The measure sponsored by Senator Johnson (Republican), California, probably will be offered as an amendment to the administration's securities regulation bill undergoing revision by the Senate Banking Committee.

The board would be composed of the Secretaries of State and Commerce and the governor of the Federal Reserve Board. No one could float a foreign loan in this country without first gaining its permission.

Boy Scouts Face Crowded Season

Lively discussions as to future programs of the scoutmasters' group and resolutions for active participation of Scoutmasters and their assistants in the near future, also featured the meeting. President Murray expressed great pleasure at the showing made by the meeting.

Most of those who attended brought gifts of foodstuffs, linens and other needs of the institution.

Among the honored guests were three "oldest inhabitants." They were Mr. and Mrs. W. J. H. Robinson, of Washington, and Mrs. Josephine Freece, of Shepherdstown, W. Southern Railway Rate Cut Refused

I. C. C. Rejects Plan When Pullman Reduction Is Not Included.

(Associated Press.)

Failure of the Southern Railway Co. to reduce Pullman rates at the same time it sought to reduce coach rates yesterday resulted in the Interstate Commerce Commission denying an application of the company for permission to charge 1½ cents a mile for coach fares on its lines west of Atlanta.

The company had been experimenting with the 1½-cent rate in North Carolina and Virginia, and gave that as a reason for seeking to establish the lower rate west of Atlanta.

Recently the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. lowered coach rates to 2 cents per mile and at the same time cut Pullman rates. The proposed 1½-cent rate would have affected only that portion of the system which competes with the Louisville & Nashville.

By Bank Robber, Passing as a Messenger in $1,400 Holdup.

Los Angeles, April 15 (A.P.).—A bicycle bandit held up the Hyde Park branch of the Bank of Inglewood and pedaled away with $1,400 today.

Gwendolin Condee, the cashier, and Tom Massirini, a guard, were bound and gagged by the robber. Miss Condee freed herself and gave an alarm.

Two policemen set out in an automobile looking for the culprit among a whole host of cyclists riding the streets.

One of the cyclists kept looking back. The officers chased him and recovered the money. After his arrest he was identified as Wilfred McCloud, 24.

In pedaling up to the bank, he carried a package, to make it appear he was a messenger.

25,000 IN CHICAGO TEACHERS' PARADE

Chicago, April 15 (A.P.).—Waving banners proclaiming themselves "forgotten women," teachers of Chicago public schools paraded today, demanding payment of back wages.

As they marched through the Loop, civic leaders struggled with plans for meeting their millions in unpaid salaries, delinquent as far back as last June.

A committee drew campaign lines for a "liberty loan" drive to sell school board tax anticipation warrants, and School Trustee H. Wallace Caldwell worked on a proposal for floating a $50,000,000 bond issue to raise cash to meet public pay rolls.

There was $1,700,000 in checks awaiting teachers at their schools for one week's work last June, but many preferred the parade to being paid.

Officials estimated 25,000 persons, including teachers, students and representatives of parent-teacher groups participated in the demonstration.

3 Hurt in Theater As Bomb Explodes

Victims Suffer Burns, but None Is Injured in Rush to Leave.

New Brunswick, N. J., April 15 (A. P.).—A "fire bomb," as police termed it, was exploded tonight in the opera house while 800 persons were viewing a film. Two men and a girl were slightly burned.

The bomb went off with little sound, but its flare was seen in every part of the crowded theater. Women screamed and a rush was made for the exits. Some patrons ran forward and climbed to the stage. No one was reported injured in the scramble to get out.

Flames started licking one of the boxes on the side of the orchestra pit near the sixth row. These were quickly extinguished and quiet was restored. The injured were Martin Mulhare, 29, of Dunellen; Edward Kenny, 24, of New Brunswick, and an unidentified girl.

JAKE THE BARBER'S SON, 19, IS KIDNAPED

have been visiting in California for several weeks. Several years ago, Jerome was withdrawn from the Morgan Park Military Academy and sent to another private school when friends warned Factor that an attempt to kidnap the son was planned.

Young Factor was on vacation from Northwestern University, where he is a junior. He was visiting his mother, Mrs. Leonard Marcus.

It was understood that Factor, who is still accounted a rich man despite the $1,300,000 settlement he recently made to British investors in the South African copper mines he once promoted, was making every effort to have his son returned.

(Associated Press.)

Attorneys for John "Jake the Barber" Factor, whose son was reported kidnaped last night in Chicago, are scheduled to appear before the Supreme Court tomorrow to protest against his extradition to England to answer charges of swindling.

Meanwhile an Associated Press dispatch from Chicago revealed that Factor had received a second letter increasing the ransom demand to $100,000.

"Only Game Fish Swim Upstream"

By GEORGE D. RILEY

JOHN M. LEAVELL, a Washington man and quite well known as a sportsman, has opened a fishing camp on the North Carolina Coast, says Fred Oertel. "This camp is located on Core Banks, opposite Atlantic, Carteret County, to which there is a good hard-surface road, via Newbern and Beaufort, and transportation across the sound to the camp is provided for.

"The fishing there is mainly for the channel bass, though various other species are taken, and is done in the surf along that stretch of beach where there is, without doubt, the finest shore for the purpose which is to be found on the Carolina coast.

"Mr. Leavell has a comfortable and well-equipped house and can accommodate parties of as many as ten at a time. There are good quarters for ladies, should they desire to go. Telephone communication and mail delivery and telegraph messages may be sent via the Coast Guard station, which is 6 miles to the southward. Rates are reasonable, and every courtesy will be shown visitors. I have fished the shore several times and had good luck—one trip the best channel bass fishing I ever had anywhere along the coast—and I've fished at many points in North Carolina, South Carolina and on down to the tip of Florida.

"Any one who likes to fish in the surf for the big fellows would be well repaid to investigate this place. The address would be Atlantic, N. C."

* * * *

Young women are forming fishing parties. We saw four in a party the other day.

F. D. Simonds, 1109 Sixth street northwest, says:

"Here is a story of something that happened to me a few years ago which is reliable and that I can prove. A party of four was fishing in Eastern Bay, out of Claibourne, on the Eastern Shore, one Saturday night, and hung onto something on bottom, and after a time I got loose and brought it to the surface. I found I had hooked a one-gallon paint bucket by the handle and when I got it in the boat I discovered a real nice live toad fish in it.

"This only happens once in a lifetime, but is true. The officers on the ferry said we were all drunk to tell such a story as that. You know the fishermen like to know of good boatmen and good places to fish. It has become popular the last few years to fish around Sharp Island, but there are few boatmen on this side who know where the best places are.

"I would like to cite two boatmen over there who are real boatmen, not because I like the people, it's the service they give you. I have fished from the head of Chesapeake Bay to Cape Charles, and have not met two brothers like them. Have fished with them for six or seven years and have never yet had to ask them to move their boat. If there is no luck in one place they will tell you to pull in your lines and if you write them about conditions they will tell you the truth.

"They charge $2 a day for three wonderful meals and fine sleeping quarters and $10 for the boat, but there is no set time when you should stop fishing. For the benefit of those who like to fish at night, 'which is the best time to fish,' you can get the 1 o'clock ferry and get there in 3 or 4 hours, and take a rest and get a good meal under your belt and get on the fishing grounds before dark and come in anytime Sunday morning.

"The reason I use the ferry is that in going from this side you may engage a boat and stormy weather will hold you back. Then again you may get over there, and if it is stormy and rough you will have a time getting back. But there are plenty of good places to run into if it gets bad. These folks are very accommodating. They want you to feel and act like you are in your own home. And how they can cook. Their names are Cooper G. Ball, Neavitt, Talbott County, Md., and Dan P. Ball, Neavitt, Talbott County, Md.

Progress has been made this year in enactment of State protective laws for black bass.

In Alabama, where no protection existed before, a bill was passed at the extra Legislature session and signed, prohibiting sale of black bass caught in the State, and providing a daily limit of 10 and a size limit of 11 inches. It also prohibits export, except by nonresident licensed anglers, who pay $2 for seven days.

Arkansas' recently passed law provides for a two months' closed season, covering part of the spawning season, a daily limit of 15 and a size limit of 10 inches.

North Dakota has enacted a law making it illegal to sell black bass regardless of where taken and limits the size to 10 inches.

West Virginia has passed a fish and game law, effective June 11, prohibiting hotels and cafes from serving black bass for profit and prohibits purchase of black bass from any source. This is the most rigid State law.

Oregon has just passed a law prohibiting sale of black bass regardless of where taken.

Laws are pending in Delaware, Rhode Island, Tennessee, North and South Carolina for further protection. Legislation was defeated or action deferred in Maryland, Indiana, Missouri, New Mexico, Kansas and South Dakota.

In order to save nests of innumerable song, insectivorous and game birds, elimination of all spring burning of grasslands, fencerows, roadsides and waste lands is recommended by Dr. Lawrence E. Hicks, ornithologist of the Ohio division of conservation, and officials of the American Game Association. Dr. Hicks has recently completed a survey of conditions obtaining in many States, and finds that practically the same conditions exist in greater or lesser degree in all States because the habits of ground-nesting birds are the same everywhere, and so is human nature.

TAXICAB EARNINGS DROP IN 4 MONTHS

Driver's Daily Income Cut to $4.25 Compared to $5.94 in 1932.

A marked decline in the earnings of taxicab drivers during the last four months was indicated in figures made public yesterday by the Public Utilities Commission.

The figures were obtained through tabulation of sworn statements by drivers as to their gross daily earnings, including tips. The daily average earnings were shown to be $4.25 for the first half of April, in comparison to an average of $5.94 for the same period in 1932.

Comparison of the gross earnings during the last year indicated a gradual decline in income.

The commission was unable to compute the net earnings of the drivers, but it was stated that they would be considerably less, as the operating expense of the cabs would have to be deducted from the gross income.

Radio Base Seized As Rum-Ring Link

Arrested Operator Says He Ran Because He Feared Bandit Invasion.

New Orleans, April 15 (U.P.).—Federal investigators today held John Evans, as the alleged operator of an unlicensed wireless station, which was said to have been used to direct the activities of rum ships in the Gulf of Mexico.

Equipment for the station was confiscated in a raid on a local residence, according to officers, a long-range transmitter was used in dispatching messages to Belize, Honduras, alleged headquarters of the rumrunners, daily at 9 a. m. and 5 p. m. The agents said they "listened in" frequently prior to the raid, decoding several messages.

Declaring he had constructed the wireless station "merely for experiments," Evans said he ran out of the back door of the residence because he "thought robbers were breaking in the house."

Judge Kreamer ordered that in case there was no other work available, Cook must dig a hole 8 feet square, next day dig another and fill the first hole, and each succeeding day transfer the dirt from one to the other of the holes.

STEAGALL PREDICTS INFLATED CURRENCY

Alabaman Foresees House Action on Some Form at This Session.

(Associated Press.)

A prediction that the House would approve some form of currency inflation was made yesterday by Chairman Steagall, of the House Banking Committee.

Asserting that some method of expansion of the currency should be undertaken "to give people enough money with which to do business," the Alabama Democrat expressed hope for "some inflation at this session."

"I think there is a general feeling there ought to be an expansion of the currency," Steagall said, "I favor that. I favor some method of expansion. I hope we are going to have some inflation at this session."

House Sentiment in Doubt.

He said he did not know "whether a majority of the House favors expansion" but added that if such a proposition were presented for a vote "it will pass."

Steagall has been the proponent of several inflationary bills in Congress in the past two years. The first was the Glass-Steagall bill enacted in the Hoover administration to broaden the base of paper eligible for discount purposes at the Federal Reserve banks. He also sponsored a silver remonetization bill.

Steagall did not think the two or three billion dollar public works program contemplated by the Roosevelt administration would be combined with an inflation proposal.

Wagner Relief Measure.

Before advocating inflation at this session, the Alabaman said he would seek to have the Banking Committee favorably report the Lewis-Wagner $500,000,000 relief bill. Hearings are to be resumed Tuesday. The administration's two billion-dollar home mortgage refinancing bill, he said, "may be reported without hearings."

Meanwhile Democratic leaders became concerned over the delay of the committees, particularly Steagall's own, in placing the administration's legislative program before the House.

Representative Byrns, of Tennessee, Democratic leader, said that unless Senate and House committee speeded up action it appeared "Congress will be in session until August."

Twin Babies Are Rescued From $2,000 Fire in Home

Are Saved by Mother and Their Sister From Smoke-Filled Room at Fort Myer Heights; Three Towns' Firemen Summoned.

A twin baby boy and girl escaped probable death yesterday afternoon when their 12-year-old sister and their mother braved the smoke-filled room in which they slept to hurry them to safety as unexplained flames damaged the home of Rodney Dawson, Fort Myer Heights, Va., late yesterday afternoon.

Mrs. Rodney Dawson, mother of the 2-year-old twins, Robert and Anne Hazel, was working in the kitchen of her double-house. She turned to Myrtle and said:

"Go wake the twins. They have slept long enough."

As Myrtle opened the door to her baby brother and sister's room, she detected the odor of smoke. She screamed and her mother hurried to her.

Mother and daughter carried the twins to safety, coughing and their eyes running from the acrid smoke. Neighbors summoned fire apparatus from Clarendon, Ballston and Cherrydale.

The volunteer firemen saved the dwelling from complete ruin, though they were considerably handicapped by the 2,000-foot distance of the nearest water plug.

The fire evidently began in the attic and was undetermined. Through the efforts of the volunteer firemen only the upper floors and the attic were badly damaged. Damage was estimated at $2,000.

Only yesterday morning citizens of the community adjacent to the Dawson home had appealed to the Board of County Commissioners for the installation of water plugs closer to their dwellings. Early action was foreseen as a result of the fire.

MINIMUM PAY ACT OPPOSED BY WOMEN

(Associated Press.)

A vigorous protest from the National Woman's Party was sent President Roosevelt yesterday expressing shock at his recommendation to governors of thirteen States urging minimum wage laws for women and children.

The party, which insists on equality for men and women, not only wired the Chief Executive but sent telegrams to the same governors approached by Mr. Roosevelt, urging them to "do nothing" on the recommendation until its spokesmen have been heard.

"This is the first time in our history that a President has ever recommended unequal laws for men and women," said the wire to Mr. Roosevelt.

Challenge to Equality.

"What becomes of that part of the Democratic platform in which the Jeffersonian principle of equal rights to all was so recently heralded throughout the Nation? At your earliest convenience we desire a hearing at which we may lay our protest before you in person. In view of the depression, which concerns millions of women, this is a matter of great urgency."

Mrs. Florence Bayard Hilles, national chairman, dispatched the message.

Meanwhile legislation to create a Federal minimum wage board and provide a vast public works program was being shaped up yesterday by President Roosevelt's advisers as the foundation for a campaign to increase the purchasing power of labor.

Rider to Black Bill.

The Chief Executive was represented in Congressional circles as favorable to both proposals, though the details have yet to be determined.

It is planned to incorporate the minimum wage legislation into the Black 30-hour week bill when it reaches the House, together with modifications of that measure to make it more flexible.

Portions of the proposed public works program are still undetermined, although administration thought is crystallizing around the figure of $2,000,000,000 for Federal construction. This would be supplemented by making about $1,500,000,000 available for State and local consumption work through the Reconstruction Corporation and $500,000,000 for direct relief, much of which would be devoted to construction projects.

The Things they bought Three Years Ago have begun to WEAR OUT

When the crash came in October of 1929 the men of means, the men of position, were the first to feel it. Their investments were hit. Their stocks were hit. Their incomes from sources other than salaries were hit. Later on their salaries, too, were hit . . . but that did not come for some months.

They were the first to curtail their buying, to cut down their expenses . . . because they were the first to suffer a loss in income. And they were in a position where the curtailing of buying was easy. Having bought unsparingly in the bountiful days, they were well supplied with many of the necessities. They had plenty of suits and shirts and shoes and furniture and household articles . . . some of which had seen but little service. They had a surplus of supplies. Then they began to make full use of what they had accumulated. Suits worn but a few times and laid aside for better ones were now put to use. Shirts bought in half dozen or dozen lots and put away for future use were now taken from the bureaus. So it was with other things.

Today these supplies have begun to wear out. And at the same time these men have come to realize that they aren't as poor as they thought they were. They have become accustomed to diminished incomes from securities and investments. They have made the necessary changes in their way of living. They find that their salaries, while lower than they once were, are still good salaries. These men are in a position to do some real buying now. There are a lot of things that they really need . . . and they have the money with which to buy them.

While men of means and position lost money from the start of the depression it wasn't till months later that wage earners, laborers and clerks suffered any loss in income, through cuts in salaries or wages. So for a while the people in the lower income groups were able to keep on buying as usual. But when they were hit their buying power was crippled more severely because they had small incomes to begin with, and these were made smaller or cut out entirely through unemployment. Many of these men, therefore, are now buying only what they absolutely have to buy . . . and some of them are not buying at all.

Everybody reads a newspaper . . . those who have money and those who haven't, those with jobs and those without, those who work with their hands and those who work with their brains, those who are in a position to buy and those who aren't. The question for the advertiser is: which newspapers are read by the people who are best able to buy his merchandise today?*

The circulation of The Washington Post is concentrated upon the families who do the bulk of the buying in Washington stores—in 1933 as well as they did in 1929. Now, as before the depression, its readership is comprised of the substantial, intelligent families that have always constituted the best market for advertised products. Recent surveys show that the circulation of The Washington Post is measured in exact ratio to the buying habits of the families within its territory . . . 79 per cent of its circulation goes to the families who buy 80 per cent of all the commodities sold by Washington merchants — even though they comprise but 65 per cent of the population. . . . This immediately emphasizes the fallacy of mere numbers in determining the value of an advertising medium. . . . Nothing can take the place of RESULTS and results can only be secured from those who are prepared to buy. No other newspaper in Washington is so concentrated upon the actual buying market!

Diplomatic Pouch

By HAROLD J. T. HORAN

Germania.

THE change in the German Embassy here will involve not only the ambassador himself, and the type of German life which he represented, but the flag of Germany as well. Instead of wasp-waisted Baron von Prittwitz, thin-lipped, aristocratic, as ambassador, Hitler will have as his representative chubby, good-natured Dr. Hans Luther, creator of the rentenmark, the type of German industrialist of Grand Hotel. The old black, white and red flag of Germany shortly will be replaced by the swastika flag of the Hitlerites. The attaches of the embassy were mortified not to have available a Nazi flag, but they cabled Berlin for one, and soon the new flag will float over the new ambassador.

Flags have a predominating influence in German foreign policy. Thus German Ambassador Voretzsch, at Tokyo, was dismissed from his post because he refused to fly the swastika emblem, and he explained his failure to show the Nazi flag over the embassy by saying:

"No one here has ever seen such a flag and, besides, we would not know how to make one." His dismissal was demanded instantly.

Four or five years ago, Dr. Luther solved the impasse involving the new and old flags by ordering all the Hanseatic ports to fly both flags.

Ambassador Luther is the type of dogged industrialist that has made German industrial German renaissance the factor in world trade it is today. He was president of the German Central Bank, and as such outside the authority of Hitler.

Diplomatistes.

WHILE the United States has lost the distinction of having the first woman diplomatist, it undoubtedly will win the honor of having the most beautiful envoy in the person of Minister-designate to Denmark, Ruth Bryan Owen.

The last of the liberal arts to open its ranks to women is diplomacy. Before the war there had never been a diplomatiste from any country, although the influence of beautiful women in history had been as decisive as it was discreet. Soviet Russia decided to make precedents in this realm of diplomacy and sent Mme. Kollontai, an exotic beautiful woman from the Baltic provinces, as Minister to Norway. The Soviet diplomatiste spent more of her time buying smart clothes on the Rue de la Paix than she did in her legation. She was subsequently sent to Mexico, but her Baltic looks failed in the tropic atmosphere of Mexico City. Her reputation for chic was never realized because Mexican police expelled her shortly after her arrival.

The fascinating Minister-designate Owen was a nurse during the war and often acted in amateur theatricals for the benefit of the wounded. She has visited Denmark and is also interested in agriculture. Her nomination was confirmed by the Senate even before it had been officially submitted.

FERDINAND VEVERKA, Minister from Czechoslovakia, is a violent anti-Hitlerite. He carried his enthusiasm to such an excess that he recently spoke against the Nazi movement at a mass meeting in New York . . . Michael Wright, who is coming to Washington with Prime Minister MacDonald, was once perilously in danger of being dismissed from the foreign office for having written an indiscreet letter to an American prohibitionist in Lynchburg, Va., promising, in the name of the ambassador, Sir Esme Howard, to close the embassy and all the other embassies as well to alcoholic liquors. His popularity in the Diplomatic Corps can be imagined.

His immutable doctrine of sound money was beyond the program of the Nazis, and, as his position was likewise, the chancellor offered him the important post of Washington in return for resigning his Central Bank position. He was ordered to replace Baron von Prittwitz, and Dr. Hjalmar Schacht went to the Reichsbank.

When he was a young man he tramped the Black Forest and the Bavarian Highlands with wandering groups of German Turners. Unlike the aristocratic members of the German diplomatic service who attended the fashionable universities of Bonn, Gottingen and Heidelberg and belonged to the student clubs like the White Ring, his education was thorough, practical and concrete. He is a world authority on money and banking and lives like a bookkeeper in a one-family house in Berlin with his two daughters, 18 and 12 years old. He is not social in the formal sense of the word, but likes beer parties and friendly, unpretentious get-togethers.

THE arrival of the first German military attache since the war, Maj. Gen. Friedrich von Boetticher, will automatically endow him the first rank in precedence over all the other military attaches here. No other embassy or legation will have a major general, although the Mexicans have a brigadier general, who anomalously enough is placed in the diplomatic list after the secretaries.

Gen. Boetticher has the all-important mission of clarifying the plan of German military equality to the War Department. He was the chief technical adviser to the German delegation at the disarmament conference and is known as an outstanding authority on military ballistics. He was professor of this branch of military science in the artillery school at Jueterbogk. The technical features of German military equality will have a persuasive and highly competent advocate, as the general speaks English well and has a pleasing personality.

Pittman Asks $9,000 Be Given Mrs. Walsh

(Associated Press.)

Payment by the Senate of $9,000 to Senora Nieves Perez Chaumont Walsh, widow of the late Montana senator, was asked yesterday in a bill by Senator Pittman (Democrat), Nevada, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee. The custom of paying a senator's widow a year's salary long has been in vogue among members.

Walsh was married in Cuba about a week before his sudden death en route to Washington from Miami, Fla. His wife was the former Senora de Truffin, widow of a reputedly wealthy Cuban sugar man.

FRENCH ARMY FEELS LACK OF WAR BABES

Males Born During Conflict Are Poor Material and Rejections May Rise.

Paris, April 15 (A.P.).—France's lowered birthrate during the war years is already beginning to make itself felt in the composition of its army.

In order to keep the conscript forces at a minimum of 200,000 men during the critical period between 1935 and 1939, when the comparatively few boys born between 1914 and 1918 will come of military age, the young "poilus" due to join the colors this present April are seeing their summonses adjourned.

Instead of the massive, nation-wide departures for barracks and camps of 100,000 "Blues" in April and a corresponding number in October, each contingent due for a year's compulsory service, they are now being sent out in smaller groups of from 10,000 to 15,000 at monthly intervals.

To Prevent Gaps.

This is designed to retard the age at which the young recruits will begin their soldiering, so that they may be called later to fill the gaps in the conscript "classes" of the war generation.

Normally a minimum of 200,000 youths having passed their twenty-first birthdays is available for incorporation in the army. But beginning with 1935, now only two years off, war ministry officials fear that the minimum may fall as low as 100,000.

This is due not only to the falling off in births, but to the considerable infantile mortality attendant on the war. From lack of care, shortened nourishment during the tender years, and the great grippe epidemic of 1918, the army authorities estimate that the percentage of those rejected for physical ineptitude in 1935 will be materially increased.

Recruits to Wait.

Therefore the ambitious youngsters eager to don uniform ahead of time, at 19 or 20, are being told not to volunteer now, but to come back a good month or more after their twenty-first birthdays. The scheme being worked out provides for a progressive retard in the age of incorporation into the army until the age of 21 years 4½ months will be the minimum for donning the buck private's uniform.

In that manner it is expected that the boys of the "fat years" will be able to bridge the gap in the horizon blue lines that otherwise would be threatened by the dearth of boys born in the "lean years."

Within the limits of existing laws, Premier Daladier, who is also war minister, is now putting the plan into operation. In a short time enabling legislation, in the form of a bill introduced by Deputy Paul Bernier, is expected to be adopted by parliament so as to give the premier an even freer hand.

Ulster Prohibits Revolt Meetings

"Bloody Easter" Rites Are Forbidden Because of Disorder Fears.

Belfast, Northern Ireland, April 15 (A.P.).—Fears that a proposed commemoration tomorrow of the "bloody Easter week" rebellion of 1916 will "give rise to grave disorder and will promote disaffection" led the government of Northern Ireland today to prohibit gatherings which had been arranged for Belfast, Armagh, Londonderry and Newry.

Throughout the Irish Free State tomorrow the event will be observed by gatherings in cemeteries in which are buried those who lost their lives in the unsuccessful attempt to free Ireland from England by force of arms.

President Eamon de Valera of the Irish Free State was one of the leaders of this revolt and the death sentence against him ultimately was cancelled.

Legion Predicts Change In Faulty Veteran Cuts

Indianapolis, April 15 (A.P.).—National officers of the American Legion, in a statement here today, expressed confidence that President Roosevelt will change, before they become effective July 1, regulations governing reduced compensation for disabled veterans of the World War.

The statement said National Commander Louis Johnson, in a conference with the President last Wednesday, pointed out several "grave injustices" that heretofore had not been called to his attention.

Decidedly in cadence with the times was the oil painting displayed in the window of Lowdermilk's Book Shop last week, "Tapping a New Barrel." The work was achieved by the well-known German artist, Wilhelm Hasselblach, and is a parcel of the late Col. Robert M. Jones' estate.

Wonder how many of the people that traffic cop at Fourteenth and F streets waves to he knows? Very likely less than 3.2 per cent.

TRAFFIC was thick on a downtown artery where U turns are strictly prohibited. A motor cop was giving a verbal dressing down to a man driving a little flivver. Just then he heard a shout:

"How about this?"

A large limousine, bearing license tag numerals that you can count on your fingers, had deliberately made the U turn and broken into a traffic line. The maneuver further upset the already muddled situation.

The cop looked. He looked a little harder and was somewhat embarassed when he noticed the low numbered licensed tag and several grim looking dowagers. And then he laughed—he looked like a pretty good guy, at that—and he hollered back to his first interlocutor:

"Well, what am I going to do?"

His diplomacy was unquestioned and few disagreed that after all, in these days "Discretion is the better part of valor."

San Franciscans Shun Liquor as Beer Returns

San Francisco, April 15 (U.P.).—Always regarded as one of the wettest spots in the Nation, San Francisco during the past week has witnessed a radical drying-up process, and bootleggers lay most of the blame on beer.

Speakeasy customers have deserted their favorite haunts in favor of cafes, restaurants and other places which have maintained an astonishing business in the beer trade. Several "speaks" have closed voluntarily. Many others have discontinued handling hard liquor for the time being, and are serving only beer.

FROM A SENATOR'S DIARY—

By the 97th Senator

Wednesday.

MY Democratic colleagues are beginning to awaken to the fact that nowhere is the Rooseveltian "new deal" more in evidence than in their own party leadership. Mr. Roosevelt, of course, has established himself as the real boss—no one disputes that for an instant—but beyond that, virtually all the old-timers have been relegated to the background while comparative strangers occupy the key positions in the party councils. Democratic chiefs who have "fit and bled for the cause" for years find themselves crowded out of the picture, displaced by men almost unknown to the public.

One of the arguments frequently made during the campaign in behalf of Roosevelt's election was that he would have such a wide selection of able Democrats available for his Cabinet. Elihu Root was quoted as saying in effect: "What has happened to our party? We used to have most of the brains. Now they seem to have moved over to the Democrats." In speculation over possible Cabinet choices, an imposing array of names was presented—Al Smith, John W. Davis, James M. Cox, Gov. Ritchie, Newton D. Baker, Owen D Young, Melvin A. Traylor, to mention only a few, and not one of them was selected. And not only were they left out of the Cabinet, but they also are conspicuously absent in the framing of administration policies.

I do not say this in a spirit of criticism. I only state it as a fact, as I get it from my Democratic informants. Some of them are rather sour about it, but they are keeping mum, because they realize that the country just now is in no humor to sympathize with them. The public apparently is willing to let Mr. Roosevelt pick his own advisers. What it wants is results.

Rumors circulate from time to time that Al Smith is frequently consulted by Roosevelt; that Al comes to Washington secretly and slides furtively through the back door of the White House to give his advice to the President. I don't know why there should be all this stealth. I see no reason in the world why Al should not walk up to the front door in broad daylight, brown derby, big cigar and all, and confer with Roosevelt as often as he sees fit. The truth is, I am authoritatively informed, the nearest Al has been to the White House since Roosevelt moved in was on the Pennsylvania avenue pavement fronting the Executive Mansion when he marched with the Tammany braves in the inaugural parade on March 4.

John W. Davis, Democratic standard-bearer in 1924, was prominently mentioned for Secretary of State or Attorney General in the early Cabinet guessing. If Mr. Davis is being consulted by the President he manages to do so without attracting the attention of the newspapers. James M. Cox, who carried the banner of Democracy in 1920, has been a White House visitor—once since Roosevelt's inauguration. It should be recalled that it was at Mr. Cox's insistence that Roosevelt was nominated as his Vice Presidential running mate in 1920. Their relations are friendly but not intimate. The President, it is understood, offered Cox an ambassadorship but Cox declined, preferring not to accept any appointment that would involve a fixed tenure of office.

Gov. Ritchie has been an occasional visitor at the White House, but chiefly as a critic of the banking program. It is whispered about that Mr. McAdoo is growing irritated because he is not invited into the inner councils. Young and Traylor, Raskob and Shouse, Jim Reed, Curry and McCooey, so far as the White House is concerned, all seem to have joined the ranks of the "forgotten men."

Thursday.

MY COLLEAGUE and fellow diarist, Henry Ashurst, has been Senator from Arizona ever since that State was admitted to the Union in 1912. For years he enjoyed the distinction of topping the Senate roll call. When a quorum or a record vote was demanded, Ashurst's name, like Abou Ben Adhem, led all the rest. Then, in the spring of 1923, came a stranger from Colorado, appointed by the governor to fill a vacancy caused by death, to challenge Ashurst's precedence. His name being Alva Adams, the clerk had no choice but to put him ahead of Ashurst.

Adams distinguished himself as a member of the Teapot Dome committee, but when he ran for election in the fall of 1924 he went down to defeat in the Coolidge landslide. Ashurst's name went back to the top of the list again and there it remained until March 4. And it is Adams, the same Adams from Colorado, who displaces him again. Adams attempted a comeback last year, and after a bitter primary fight won easily in the election. He has a full six-year term to serve this time, so Henry Ashurst will have to be content with second place on the roll call for a long while.

William Gibbs McAdoo succeeds Hiram Bingham as the most "air-minded" senator. He keeps his own private airplane in commission, ready to take off on a few minutes' notice for any part of the country. At 69, he is still one of the most active and agile members of the Senate. A quick dash from coast to coast is a mere incident in his life, and he thinks nothing of leaping into his plane for a fishing trip to South Carolina when he needs some recreation.

Some time ago, commenting on the poor showing of minor candidates in the Presidential election, I mentioned that Gen. Coxey got 10,000 votes out of 40,000,000 cast for the Presidency. The general writes me:

"I am glad to get this information. It is the first authentic one that I have had and I am very much surprised to hear that there are 10,000 intelligent voters in the United States. It causes me great pleasure to learn that fact."

Friday.

MY impression is that the advocates of the World Court won't get much help from Roosevelt. He is committed to it by the Democratic platform and he holds that the platform must be carried out. But there are so many other measures on the administration program ahead of the World Court that it will be next to impossible to bring about a vote on ratification at the present session.

The World Court protocol has been before the Senate now more than ten years. It was sent to the Capitol by Harding and Hughes with a recommendation that it be approved. After four years of consideration, the Senate ratified it, but with reservations wholly unacceptable to the other powers. Elihu Root undertook to straighten out the difficulty with another reservation of 1,600 words, which Mr. Hoover indorsed.

The protocol is still in the hands of the Foreign Relations Committee. In the last week or two there has been some confusion—and there still is—concerning the Democratic plans for disposing of the World Court issue. A few days ago Joe Robinson, the Democratic leader, indicated that he and his followers were ready to bring it to a showdown at any time. The "irreconcilables" began whetting up their cutlasses for a last-ditch fight. They made it plain they were as "irreconcilable" as ever. To those who know the "irreconcilables" and their staying qualities it was obvious that any attempt to force ratification of the protocol at this time would produce plenty of debate and a lot of hard feeling. Then word came that the administration had no disposition to press the World Court until other major features of its program had been passed. Ratification, I fear, is still a long, long way off.

I predicted George Moses wouldn't be out of a job long. He has been off the Senate pay roll a little more than a month and now he is going back to journalism. He is going to have an office in Washington and write pieces about foreign affairs. George is a talented writer and "knows his stuff," if I may be pardoned for falling into the vernacular of my younger colleagues. I wish him success.

BRITISH M. P. SEES UPTURN IN AMERICA

Sir William Alexander Says Now Is Time to Resume Extensive Trading.

London, April 15 (A.P.).—A new policy for reciprocal trade with foreign countries has been placed before the National Union of Manufacturers, of which he is president, by Brig. Gen. Sir William Alexander, member of parliament.

Outlining the plan in the union's official journal, Sir William predicts a speedy recovery by the United States, from which he has just returned, and an intensified competition in the markets of the world.

"I believe all great commercial nations have realized that the time for the resumption of international trading on an extensive scale has now arrived," Sir William says.

Reciprocal Trade.

"If we want to sell British goods to other nations, we must in return be prepared to buy from them.

"I believe it is possible to evolve a system by which our trade with practically every foreign country can be really reciprocal. If, for example, we take from the United States £1,000,000 worth of goods in the form of oil, cotton, tobacco and other of her products, it should be possible to arrange for America to take from us £1,000,000 worth of goods in return.

"Obviously she could not accept without detriment to her own industries the full equivalent in manufactured articles from the United Kingdom. Therefore, for the purposes of international trade, I would regard the British empire as one unit and would offset as a credit all goods drawn from empire sources.

Could Be Overcome.

"Admittedly there would be difficulties in the establishment and operation of such a plan, but I assert that no difficulty would be encountered which could not be overcome.

"The decisions of the Ottawa conference and the extension of the arrangements then made facilitate the initiation of such a system of reciprocal trade which, incidentally, would be of special advantage in our dealings with low-wage countries.

"I foresee that the plan I have outlined would, in time, transfer a measure of the control of international commerce from the realm of politics to the hands of industrialists."

Wallace Beery Awarded Air Reserve Commission

Long Beach, Calif., April 15 (A.P.). Wallace Beery, the screen actor, flew his airplane to the Long Beach Airport today and was commissioned lieutenant commander in the United States Naval Reserve Aviation Corps.

Several officers from the staff of Rear Admiral Senn, commandant of the naval district, which includes Long Beach, were present at the ceremony. Beery will be attached to this base.

Fort Knox to See Giant War Games

First Unit of Artillery at Kentucky Post for Maneuvers.

Fort Knox, Ky., April 15 (A.P.).—Twenty-one artillerymen from Fort Totten, N. Y., were moving into quarters here today. They form the advance guard of a troop concentration that in the next month will bring here thousands of infantry, artillery and cavalry soldiers and 113 fighting airplanes from points as far distant as California, New York and Texas.

They are gathering at this fort for one of the largest peace-time war games the Army has ever staged.

Its size, however, will be surpassed by its significance. For twelve days, from May 15 to 27, the mimic battle will be waged for Army chiefs to determine exactly how efficient are modern anti-aircraft weapons pitted against the skill of America's most daring military pilots.

Gallery Glimpses

By ROBERT C. ALBRIGHT

WE have thought it all over and have come to this sober, well considered conclusion—they brought it upon themselves.

It all started when they passed that patronage resolution. The situation might be pretty well under control if it hadn't been for that.

Yes, it was the resolution and the pamphlet the Civil Service Commission obediently prepared that let the cat out of the bag. Oyez, oyez, screamed the pamphlet—130,000 Government jobs not Civil Service protected!

Up and down the breadth of the land spread the glad tydings. The printing office could not publish copies fast enough. Private printers took up the task. Democratic jobless everywhere heard the good news. They started for Washington. Some paused en route to buy detailed listings of the prize plums at 25 cents per list.

That was the beginning of it, and from that time on Democratic members of House and Senate have been a legion of harried souls. Relentlessly the jobless have pursued them from office to chamber, to, hotel, to office, to chamber.

Ineffectually members have sought to evade, explain, sleep, die even. Unavailingly they have tried to pacify. But there is one thing they have not done—they have not been able to chisel a dent in that list of 130,000.

It would be impossible to describe the chase they have led. Patronage seekers, with instincts of bloodhounds on a fresh scent, have tracked them from pillar to post, gone with them to bed at night, risen with them at the first break of day. And all because of that list.

ONE senator from a Western State has 25 camping on his trail. He has done everything but support them. They refuse to go home. Doesn't the list say there are 130,000 jobs——

Another member from a Southern State has ordered all telephones disconnected in a last futile effort.

But the gesture is useless. He realizes that. Telephones are only part of his worries. The railroads are in league against him. Every Sunday they run week-end excursions to Washington, chock full of aspiring Democrats. And they all drop around for a friendly little chat. Most think they would rather be rail coordinator.

Members from close by probably have suffered greatest. Recently they have taken to posting neat little notices on their doors, prescribing hours for callers. Some frankly have called a moratorium and have ordered their secretaries to tell jobseekers so.

Instructions to P. B. X. board operators at hotel residences invariably have proven fruitless. Gracie Allen has a lot of relatives in town. Such calls as the following crash through: "But he sounds awfully important, senator. And he said if he didn't reach you, he would call Jim Farley."

Jim Farley. There's a man. He has sat tight through all of this unrest, unruffled, apparently unperturbed. So the slogan is, "See Jim Farley." He tells them something. What it is, we never have been able to discover. Maybe it has something to do with the list.

YET they brought it upon themselves. There can be no denying it. And now they must bear with the White House until it can get around to this job business. For the present, there are more important matters. Try and find a loyal Democrat who will dispute it.

Whether Huey Long belongs we can't quite figure out, but he stands pat on this patronage question. There can be no doubt that he speaks for other Senate Democrats on the matter.

Yet Huey's remarks were amusing to some observers. Said Senator Long:

"I have read in the papers that we are all being held in line with patronage, that they are not handing out the jobs yet and that we are all being good until the jobs are handed out.

"I resent that. That is not what has inspired the men of the Senate to stand by and vote for the bills that come here. They have carried along with the President time after time when they doubted the wisdom of these bills, trying to submerge their own opinions in order to help the President pull the country out of the mud. I have not voted for these bills because I feared I was not going to get any patronage. So far as I am concerned in voting, they can take my patronage and go."

And we think Huey meant it.

It now develops that the House restaurant might have sold beer even if the District's lager bill had never been passed. The Capitol, if a special House Accounts subcommittee knows what its about, is outside the regulatory purview of the Commissioners—a sort of oasis in our ordinance governed city. The possibilities are infinite.

Senator Jim Ham Lewis, elegant, eloquent, champion of the administration, portrays the millennium:

"Behold this your land as she now, under the new dispensation, moves out to the temple of the international relationship. May we not conceive her as she advances before us. Around her brow are bound the Ten Commandments of God. In her right hand the Sermon on the Mount; in her left hand, the Constitution of the United States. Armored in this trinity she ascends to the new chancellory as high priest of the service.

We wonder:

Why Senator Goldsborough could not understand his colleague's explanation of the farm relief bill?

Who apologized to whom when Senator Tydings butt-heads with former Senator Owen in the Senate last week?

What secretary to what representative socked another secretary to another representative with a golf stick, just in play?

What happened to the 30-hour-week bill?

WEAVER HURLS NATS TO 2-1 VICTORY OVER RED SOX

Ladysman Defeats Derby Hopes as Havre de Grace Opens

Schulte Stars With 3 Hits Off Rhodes

Both Teams Held to 5 Hits; Goslin's Catch Saves Game in 9th.

By SHIRLEY L. POVICH
(Sports Editor of The Post.)

THE new owners of the Red Sox, who have promised to relieve a long-suffering Boston public by placing a fat checkbook at the disposal of Manager Marty McManus, got a run for their money yesterday, but the Nats got two and won the ball game, 2 to 1.

It was an improved grade of Sox that came here fresh from two hard-luck defeats at New York, far more closely knit than the brand that the rest of the league has been punching full of holes since the salad days of 1918, but they were unfortunate enough to meet up with Monte Weaver when Monte was in the best of health.

To be a bit more specific, the score reads: Washington, 2; Dale Alexander, 1, for it was a solo effort by the big first baseman that accounted for the only damage suffered by Weaver. It took the form of a rollicking home run high up in the terraced bleachers in left field in the seventh inning, which cheated Monte of a shutout triumph.

Alexander Not Slowest Man on Team.

While Alexander was jogging around the bases, the Boston correspondents took the occasion to deny that the big slugger, who led all the American League hitters last season, is the slowest man in baseball. Down at Sarasota this spring, they said, Alexander ran a dead heat with Smead Jolley for the honor in a race timed by the town clock.

Gordon Rhodes, whom the Red Sox acquired from the Yankees last summer in a deal for Wilcy Moore, of sinker ball fame, gave Weaver a tenacious argument for seven innings but the Nats' bats spoke up in the second inning to the extent of one run on two hits and were heard again in the sixth when the final and decisive run clattered across the plate.

Big Bob Kline, all man, found his way into the game in the eighth and the Nats bowed to his speed in one-two-three order in the last inning, coming out of the contest with only five hits to their credit, the same number that Weaver permitted the Sox.

Schulte Accessory in Run-Making.

Fred Schulte, who can soon be elected on the People's ticket if he continues to pound out the base hits with the same fine regularity that has marked his efforts so far, was an accessory in both of the Nats' runs, scoring the first and driving Goose Goslin home with the second. He accounted for exactly three-fifths of the Nats' five hits.

The Goose made the game safe for the Nats and the faltering Weaver with two out and two on in the ninth when his slightly-bowed underpinnings carried him with great haste over toward the right-field foul line where Roy Johnson's rifle shot was descending with extra bases labeled all over it. Goslin stuck out a des-

Chess Crown Passes From D. C. Prisoner

He was awarded the title by officers of the State Chess Association after Norman T. Whittaker, the other finalist, again failed to appear. Second prize went to D. G. Weiner, secretary of the association.

Officials declared Whitaker is in prison in Washington, D. C. They said he is suspected by police of being "The Fox" in Gaston B. Means' plot to extort $104,000 from Mrs. Evalyn Walsh McLean on the promise to return the kidnaped Lindbergh baby.

Armour Ired By Ignoring Of Burke

Joins Ryder Cup Protest; Would Limit Years of Play.

By PAUL MICKELSON.

CHICAGO, April 15 (A.P.).—Tommy Armour, the celebrated Scot star of the fairways, tonight stepped into the dispute raging about the exclusion of Billy Burke from the 1933 Ryder Cup team with a stinging rebuke of the Professional Golfers Association and a proposal that no American be permitted to compete more than twice in the international team matches against England.

"Burke's exclusion from this year's team is one of the outstanding disgraces of golf," Armour said, joining Gene Sarazen in protesting the failure of the P. G. A. to name the 1931 national open champion. "Burke should have been named on that team and he should have been named second, behind Sarazen and ahead of Walter Hagen. Frankly, I can't see how two of the players got on the team anyway.

National Open Top Prize.

"From the professional golfer's viewpoint, the ultimate in golf is to win the National Open championship of the United States. Any golfer can come along and win a couple of winter tournaments, but where are they when the big show is on? Nowhere! Burke won the open in 1931 in the greatest overtime match of medal golf. Yet because he didn't win a few championships along the winter kerosene circuit, they barred him from the 1933 Ryder Cup team. The P. G. A. doesn't lend any dignity to its own championship and now it's trying to rob the dignity of the National Open."

With that and several other torrid blasts against the P. G. A. off his chest, Armour, who has moved from Detroit to pro at the Medinah Club near Chicago, suggested that membership on the American Ryder Cup team be limited to competition on two squads.

"Why not pass the honor around?" he asked. "After a player has played on two teams, he should be ineligible for further competition. Such a rule would be a great thing for the younger professionals of this country. It would give them an added incentive, make it impossible for several players to always stand out in the international competition and give the matches some new life and blood.

"What would happen to American college football if players were allowed to keep right on playing on the varsity until they decided to quit? It would rob the sport of its color and stunt the football ambition of the young players. Well, the same thing goes for golf. You got to give youth a break."

Dynastic Has Cough; Scratched From Derby

Lexington, Ky., April 15 (A.P.).—Dynastic probably will not start in the Kentucky Derby, Maj. Louis A. Beard, manager of Mrs. Payne Whitney's Greentree Stable, said today.

Beard was informed today by William Brennan, who is training the Greentree horses at Red Bank, N. J., that Dynastic has developed a cough and is taking no exercise more than walking.

ROWE STOPS CHISOX FOR TIGERS, 3-0

Rookie Yields 6 Hits in First Start in Major Leagues.

DETROIT, April 15 (A.P.).—Lynwood "Schoolboy" Rowe, rookie pitcher from Beaumont, Tex., hurled Detroit to its first victory of the season here today when he set the Chicago White Sox back, 3 to 0, and allowed them only 6 hits.

It was the schoolboy's first big league game, but it was his game all the way. He was behind only three batsmen throughout, fanned four, and saw only one get as far as third base

Detroit's first score came in the second when Stone opened with a two-bagger and went home on a sacrifice and a forced play at second. Gehringer and Stone scored in the sixth on an error by Hayes, a bunted single by White, and a single by Fox

Atlantic City Picked As Camp by Max Baer

Atlantic City, N. J., April 15 (A.P.). Max Baer, Livermore, Calif., heavyweight, has selected Atlantic City to condition himself for his battle with Max Schmeling, of Germany, in the New York Yankee Stadium on June 8.

In clear weather the inclosed gridiron of Bader Field will serve as the workout place. During inclement weather he will work in a ring pitched on the Auditorium stage.

No definite date has been set to begin training, but Baer is expected to be in action by April 28. Daily workouts are on the program until two days before the fight.

The party was officially welcomed at City Hall by Mayor Bacharach. The mayor immediately had Baer sworn in as a special detective of Atlantic City.

CHILL NOW RING OFFICIAL.

St. Paul, April 15 (A.P.).—Ollie Chill, veteran arbiter on the diamond and in the ring, has been appointed one of Minnesota's official boxing referees.

U. S. OLYMPIC HURDLE ACE KILLED

George Saling, Iowa U. Star, Dies Following Auto Crash.

ST. CHARLES, Mo., April 15 (A.P.). The death here today of George Saling, jr., Olympic hurdler, soon after an automobile crash, was an "unavoidable accident," a coroner's jury found late this afternoon.

The report said the University of Iowa athlete, 24 years old, died of internal injuries received when the steering wheel of his car crushed his chest.

He was en route to St. Louis to give an exhibition at the Maplewood relays, a high school track and field meet, accompanied by three friends.

Saling Olympic Champion.

His companions, uninjured, said the truck carried lanterns, but rain obscured their vision.

Saling was the Olympic high hurdle champion and joint holder of the world record for 110 meters of 14.4 seconds. He won the Olympic title in a breath-taking finish with Percy Beard, also of the United States; Donald Finlay, of Great Britain, and Jack Keller, United States champion. The final was won in 14.6 seconds, Saling tying the world mark in winning one of the preliminary heats.

NAVY'S CREW BEATEN BY TIGERS

Special to The Washington Post.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., April 15.—Two thrilling races on the Severn—between the varsities and junior varsities of Princeton and the Naval Academy—this afternoon marked the opening of the Eastern collegiate rowing season. Princeton took the varsity event, rowed last, by a quarter of a length, and the Navy won the juvenile race by half a length.

The character of the contest was indicated by the fact that at no time in either race were the boats separated by more than a fraction of a length. The real thrill was furnished by the desperate and nearly successful effort of the Navy varsity to catch up a lead of half a length in the last quarter of a mile.

Quarter-Length Decides Varsity.

The Princeton varsity led at the finish by a quarter length, its time being 6:56 to 6:57 made by the Navy seniors. The Navy junior varsity in the first race finished a half length ahead, its time being 6:54 and that of the Princeton juniors 6:56. The slightly faster time made by the juniors is explained by the somewhat heavier tide against which the senior boats rowed.

Conditions, however, were excellent, the water being the smoothest that has been had in this section during the spring, and a light wind

Four Races on Coast Won By U. of Washington Crews

By BRIAN BELL.

MARINE STADIUM, Long Beach, Calif., April 15 (A.P.).—University of Washington's powerful crews swept the Lagoon today as its varsity eight climaxed an afternoon of smooth rowing with a smashing victory over the University of California and the University of California at Los Angeles. Washington won all the races it entered—three.

The Huskies finished strong, leaving a length of open water to space the distance between the winner and the runner-up, in the 2,000-meter test.

California was only a bit over a second slower than the Golden Bear crew needed to capture the Olympic championship over the same course last summer, but the Huskies were much faster. Washington covered the approximate mile and a quarter in 6 minutes and 30 seconds. California's time was six minutes 38.7 seconds.

Washington was off in front in the varsity race, but California pulled up almost level as the big fellows bent to their rowing chores. There was not much to choose between the leaders at the halfway mark, with U. C. L. A. trailing in its first contest.

With the end in sight, California challenged the leader and a spurt cut down a lead of a length to half that, but the threat was short-lived. As if waiting for the challenge, Wash-

AL CROWDER TO OPPOSE RED SOX

Andrews Expected to Hurl for Boston in Second of Series.

By FRANK H. YOUNG.

IF all the pipes at Griffith Stadium did not freeze up last night, the Nationals and Red Sox will stage the first 1933 Sabbath contest here this afternoon. Gen. Alvin Crowder, who found the route just a trifle long for him on opening day, and who gave way to Al Thomas, will draw the mound assignment, with Ivy Paul Andrews expected to do his stuff for the Beaneaters.

The Sox gave the Nats a real battle yesterday and, according to Jack Mullaney, the lone scribe traveling with them, McManus has lots of power in his line-up and has every man on his toes. He declares that even if the Sox finish last again this season they will look a whole lot different doing so.

Tomorrow is an open date on the schedule here, but Skipper Joe Cronin has ruined the plans of several of his players by calling a stick drill in the morning and forcing them to wait until afternoon before they can roll their bunny eggs.

This fellow Winsett, who filled in as right gardner for the Sox yesterday, may be the best fielder in the world, but he did not have a single chance to show it yesterday. And, oddly enough, it was not until he made the out that ended the game—and a nobby catch it was, by the way—that Goslin, filling the same position for the Nats, had any defensive work to do.

Others who had little to do but shiver while their mates were working were Marty McManus, who caught a foul in the fifth, Ossie Bluege who had an assist in the sixth and Left Fielder Watwood, who contributed his lone fielding bit by taking Kuhel's looper as the game started.

Chubby Ed Linke will be the missing link of the Nats for the next few days as a result of his left knee having collided with a liner from Luke Sewell's bat during the pregame stick drill yesterday.

Following a lengthy conference yesterday, President Clark Griffith and Coach Al Schacht finally came to terms. Neither was satisfied, Schacht claiming he should have gotten a raise and Griffith contending that the coach got a raise by the very fact that he was not cut as he should have been.

There is only one other player in the American League as slow afoot as Dale Alexander, and the Red Sox have him, too. It is Smead Jolley, now out of the game with an injured leg. If the hurt makes Smead any slower he will look like he is running

First '33 Boner Results As A's Start Thinking

New York, April 15 (U.P.).—The Philadelphia Athletics earned the distinction of pulling the first "bonehead" play of the current season in their game with the Yanks today.

With two men on the bases and only two out, the A's infielders dropped their gloves and trotted to the bench, thinking the side had been retired.

Ben Chapman, on third base, scored before the players realized that only two were out.

It happened in the third inning. After Gehrig had grounded out, Chapman reached first on Ed Cihocki's error. Lazzeri scratched a hit. Dickey forced Lazzeri and it was after the completion of this play that the A's made their mistake.

No. 1 for Ruth As Mackmen Bow, 7-3

By ALAN GOULD
(Associated Press Sports Editor).

NEW YORK, April 15 (A.P.).—Looming larger than ever, due to extra wrapping for protection against the chilly breeze, Babe Ruth took a toehold in his first turn at bat today, smashed his first home run of the season into the bleachers and propelled the Yankees to a 7-to-3 victory over the Philadelphia Athletics.

The noisy acclaim of more than 25,000 rooters accompanied Ruth's jaunt around the bases behind Earle Combs. The Babe's No. 1 for 1933, for statistical purposes, was also No. 653 for his big league career.

1,200th Successive Game For Gehrig.

Lou Gehrig, with two homers already to his credit, failed to increase his total, but played game No. 1,200 in the streak of consecutive performances which he hopes to stretch to a new all-time record this year.

While Connie Mack was using four pitchers in an attempt to check the champions, big George Pipgras hurled shut-out ball for seven innings, aided by good support. The big right-hander was hit harder than his rivals, but escaped trouble in all except the eighth, when singles by Foxx and Johnson, followed by Lou Finney's homer, produced the Athletics' three runs.

Finney, replacement for Al Simmons in the A's outer patrol, led the attack on Pipgras with three hits. Jimmie Foxx, the home-run king, got nothing more damaging than a single, although he chased Combs to the running track with a terrific drive in the ninth.

Young Merritt (Sugar) Cain, right-hander, yielded eight of the Yankees' nine hits in four innings, along with five runs, and was charged with the defeat.

Chapman Catches Mack's Infield Napping.

After their three-run splurge in the first the Yankees chopped away steadily. Ben Chapman, fleet fly chaser, tallied what proved the winning marker in the third, racing home from second on an infield out as he caught the A's napping.

The Athletics took the field minus Mickey Cochrane, star backstop, who was ill and confined to his hotel room.

Coe Turf Ace Wins Sprint At Graw

Beats Rush Hour by 1-2 Length Before 15,000 Fans.

Workman Also Brings Pompeius Home in Harford Handicap.

HAVRE DE GRACE, Md., April 15 (A.P.).—Ladysman, strongly backed to win the Kentucky Derby, today asserted his superiority over a smart band of 3-year-olds, including six other Derby eligibles, on the opening program of the Eastern racing season at Havre de Grace.

The chestnut son of Pompey from W. R. Coe's barns, winner of $111,435 as the leading juvenile of 1932, made his seasonal debut in the Bayview Purse, a 6-furlong dash, run before a crowd of 15,000.

Carrying 122 pounds, 4 less than Derby weight, he conceded from 8 to 16 pounds to his rivals. Although winning by only a half length, Sonny Workman was sitting still as he passed the judges' stand.

Rush Hour Second Over Line.

S. W. Labrot's Rush Hour, a non-Derby horse but a candidate for the Preakness, took the place money by four lengths from W. N. Adrians' Crap Shooter, a winter performer not named for either of the spring classics. The Glen Riddle Farm's War Glory, a son of Man o' War, eligible for the Churchill Downs race, suffered early interference, but finished like his famous daddy to take fourth in the first of ten, under the guidance of Johnny Gilbert, leading jockey of 1932.

Ladysman, played in the mutuels almost to the exclusion of the remainder of the field, was away with the leaders but Workman quickly took him off the pace as Levall stepped up to the front. Rush Hour soon took command, however, and led Ladysman by a length to the head of the stretch.

Turning for home, Workman, who also will pilot Ladysman in the Derby and the Preakness, shot the Coe speedster to the front. With Workman holding a tight hand on the reins, he galloped across the finish line in the good time of 1:12. He paid $3.40 for a $2 straight ticket.

Pompeius Victor in Harford.

Pompeius, former stablemate of Ladysman and also sired by Pompey, kept the opening day honors in the family when he stepped 6 furlongs in the fast time of 1:11 4-5 to win the $2,500 Harford handicap.

Carrying the silks of the wealthy owner and jockey, George H. (Pete) Bostwick, and ridden by Workman Pompeius set the pace from the half-mile post. He finished a length and a half in front of J. W. Y. Martin's Con Amore, with the Howe Stable's Scotch Gold, third. Pilate, the 2-to-1 favorite, was fourth.

Little regarded in the wagering, Pompeius paid $21.80 for $2.

Phils Beat Dodgers, 2-1, as Lee Doubles

Philadelphia, April 15 (A.P.).—One run behind in the ninth inning of a mound duel between Jim Elliott and Owen Carroll, the Phillies uncorked a thrilling finish today and defeated the Brooklyn Dodgers, 2 to 1, for their first victory of the National League campaign.

The Phils got only five hits off Carroll in eight innings. In the ninth, Dick Bartell and Chuck Klein singled, Gus Dugas pushed them along with a sacrifice and Virgil Davis was purposely walked. Then Hal Lee looped a double into right field and sent the winning tallies across.

The tilt was marked by brilliant defensive work.

Great Shires Bounces Back To Braves in Mystery Deal

BOSTON, April 15 (A.P.).—It looked today as if the breaks were coming around again for "the Great One." Art Shires was back in a Boston Braves uniform and worked out with the Tribe at the Harvard indoor baseball cage.

There was considerable mystery about the whole matter. Shires, once billed as "the Great Shires," was last heard of out around Chicago getting ready to give semipro ball a break by joining up. Then he popped up here today and—of equal significance—Buck Jordan, slated to be the regular first baseman for the Braves, was absent.

"He's sick," that's all Manager Bill McKechnie would say of Jordan, shutting off any queries as to the truth of reports that Jordan had not been fulfilling expectations.

Shires started the Braves off in a burst of fight and glory last summer, but damaged one of his legs in his enthusiasm. He was placed on the voluntary retired list and while he showed up at the Braves' spring camp a few weeks ago, it was evident McKechnie had not wired him to hasten his arrival. Art tagged along until he saw how things were going and then announced he was going out and get himself a job. Thus the trip to Chicago.

Sarada Fills Out During Winter

Ladysman and Repaid Continue to Vie for Favoritism.

Red Whisk, Beefsteak Are Highly Regarded Candidates.

Special to The Washington Post.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., April 15.—Frederick A. Griffith's Sarada is beginning to loom as a menace to the hopes of those who have pinned their faith to the winter favorites for the $50,000 added Kentucky Derby. The son of Sir Gallahad III—Sari—may become one of the choices before the bugle blows for the big race at Churchill Downs on Saturday, May 6.

Sarada wintered at the Columbia, S. C., course and wintered most excellently. He grew considerably during the off months and, favored by mild weather, was galloped enough to harden him for the strenuous preparation for the Derby's mile and a quarter run. He has been taken to Maryland for a race or two prior to his Churchill Downs effort, and his performance there may alter entirely the present line-up of Derby prospects.

Sarada Good Last Season.

Sarada was a good colt last year. He won the Mrs. Spalding Lowe Jenkins Handicap at Laurel and finished third in the Sanford Stakes at Saratoga and the Walden Handicap at Pimlico. He was the rangy type of horse that improves with age, and those who have seen him in his work this spring are high on his chances.

Ladysman and Repaid continue to vie for the post of favoritism, with a slight preference for the Coe 3-year-old. There is little disposition to question the right of this pair to the leading rungs in the ladder of public esteem. Ladysman was undisputed champion of his age last year and is said to be doing everything in his training to the satisfaction of Trainer J. H. Stotler. Repaid, a good juvenile, has worked this year in a manner to stamp him as the colt they will have to step to beat in the Derby.

Mrs. W. Crump's Head Play continues to hold the limelight among the Derby candidates being prepared in the West. This handsome son of My Play-Red Head is all that the eye could ask in the way of horseflesh, and his manner of doing the work cut out for him by Trainer Crump has gained the admiration of all horsemen quartered at Churchill Downs.

Red Whisk Favorably Regarded.

C. C. Van Meter's Red Whisk, racing at Lexington, is another that is most favorably regarded by the Western contingent. He is certain to be a thoroughly fit horse when the field goes to the post on May 6.

E. R. Bradley's Boilermaker also has a large following, many, of course, being influenced by Col. Bradley's penchant for winning Kentucky Derbies. Horsemen, however, fancy Boilermaker on his merits and look upon him as a colt worthy of bearing the standard which has been so gloriously carried by former members of his stable.

Beefsteak, another Bradley eligible, is also highly regarded as a fast track performer. At New Orleans last winter he displayed brilliant speed and looked all over a topnotch performer in his two victories on a fast track. His failure in the mud in the Louisiana somewhat bedimmed his prestige, but if the track is fast on Derby day he will have to be reckoned with.

Charley O., winner of the Florida Derby, continues to show the fine form that he displayed in the South. Trainer Taylor let up on him after his Florida campaign, but again is sending him about his business and he gives every indication of measuring up to the stable's high opinion of him.

Derby Candidates Busy At Louisville Track

Louisville, Ky., April 15 (A.P.).—Rain and slop failed to halt activities of Kentucky Derby candidates today at Churchill Downs here, and all the ranking eligibles except Charley O. were on the track. No less than three of them were called on for speed tests.

Head Play was given a "blowout" in preparation for a longer test Sunday. He stepped an eighth in 0:12, quarter in 0:23 1-5, three-eighths in 0:34 3-5 and half in 0:48.

Fair Rochester turned in a mile in 1:46, clipping off the quarter in 0:24, half in 0:50, 5 furlongs in 1:04, three-quarters in 1:18 and seven-eighths in 1:31 4-5. Fair Delight, from the same stable, was tabbed the quarter in 0:24 1-5, half in 0:50 2-5, three-quarters in 1:18 2-5 and mile in 1:49.

At Top and North Mill, from the Shandon Farm Stable, breezed a mile together. North Mill was clocked a quarter in 0:26, half in 0:52 3-5; 6 furlongs in 1:18 2-5 and a mile in 1:45 3-5.

MAXES MAY HAVE BEEN WRONG

Schmeling and Baer Face Long Wait for Title Bout.

By HENRY McLEMORE.

NEW YORK, April 15 (U.P.).—There is a growing suspicion in the boxing set these days that Max Schmeling and Max Baer made a serious error in judgment when they elected to wham each other in preference to meeting Jack Sharkey for the heavyweight championship of the world.

The suspicion first arose when Baer arrived from the coast and the boys who deal in leather got an eyeful of his 230 pounds of bone and muscle. "Why," they asked in chorus, "Why did Schmeling pick this tough hombre instead of the fair, fat and going-on-forty Sharkey?"

The suspicion was strengthened when Schmeling stepped off the Bremen tanned, hard as nails and looking more like the Dempsey of old than ever. Once again the boys chorused, only this time it was to ask why Baer ever picked the rugged German in preference to the slipping champion.

Dempsey Offered More Cash.

The answer is, of course, that Baer and Schmeling didn't like the idea of that meager 10 per cent or so which is always the challenger's end of a heavyweight championship bout. They preferred to work for Dempsey where they could get something like 25 per cent each of the gate. But was their greediness wise? We doubt it. In the first place, the small percentage is all they'll ever get as challenger, whether the champion be Sharkey, Carnera or Ignatz the handyman.

In the second place, their refusal to meet Sharkey might mean they turned down the last chance they'll get a crack at the title for a long time. This is so simply because Carnera is very likely to whip the Boston sailor, and if he does you may bet your sweet life he'll take his own sweet time about defending it. Jimmy Johnston, the cocky cockney who runs Madison Square Garden, was asked how long he thought it would take Carnera to defend the title if he won it, and Jimmy, who ought to know, said, "A long, long time."

"Listen," Johnston said, "if that big Italian wins it, you know the first thing he'll do. He'll pack up and sail for home, and after a long, long rest start an exhibition tour, that'll last forever, maybe. He can make a fortune knocking out nudgeovers in Europe, and don't think he doesn't know it."

SNAPPY STORY, fractious on the way to the post, [illegible] start and galloped off a quarter mile. He broke [illegible] attendance of JUBAL, closed fast in the final drive and [illegible] maker drew out under pressure at the finish. JUBAL displayed [illegible] saving ground to draw into a long lead. He was shaken up during [illegible] but could not resist the winner's effort. BRIGHT HAVEN entered contention with good early speed, was ridden hard in the final drive, but could not threaten the first two. HUSSAR worked his way up on the outside and raced well. HOURSEND raced in the first division, but was never a dangerous factor. FRITTER CIRCLE lost ground for the entire journey. PEEDEQUE was outrun. DRESS CIRCLE broke well, but showed no speed. CHATTERDOO was in tight quarters after the break and fell back.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BUTTER BEANS, $50.20, $13.10, $8.50; ON TAP, $3.70, $3.00; LADINO, $7.00.

BUTTER BEANS, taken to the outside soon after the start, moved up strongly when leaving the back stretch, wore ON TAP down during the stretch run, and had something in reserve at the end. ON TAP disposed of CHAIN after three furlongs, was placed to punishment during the closing furlong, and tired steadily. LADINO, hard ridden and saving ground, held on well under severe urgings. MEXICO weaved his way through between horses and made up ground when clear. CATTAIL went evenly throughout. IDEALIST was never prominent at any stage. VISHNU was done after a half mile. BACKGAMMON had speed during the initial furlong. CHAIN stopped fast after a half mile.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800; allowances. The Bayview. For 3-year-olds. Start good from gate. Won handily; place, driving. Went to post at 3:43. Off at 3:47½. Winner, W. R. Coe's ch. c. Two-dollar mutuels paid—LADYSMAN, $3.40, $3.20, $2.90; RUSH HOUR, $15.50, $7.70; CRAPSHOOTER, $4.20.

LADYSMAN, steadied close to the pacemakers, gained a slight lead when settled for the final furlong and then held RUSH HOUR safe, under a mild hand ride. RUSH HOUR, strongly ridden to shake off LEVAAL, saved ground and continued with good courage when placed to punishment in the final drive. CRAPSHOOTER, slower than usual in the early stages, came around his field and finished stoutly. WAR GLORY, in tight quarters in the opening quarter mile, was taken to the outside in the last half mile and came wide into the home stretch. DARK CONQUEST began tiring after a fast three furlongs. SILENT SHOT went evenly throughout, and was worked out a mile in 1:41. PROJECTILE was taken up several times in the first quarter mile and was not persevered with when unable to hold a forward position. LEVAAL stopped badly after displaying early speed.

FOURTH RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $1,000; allowances. The Hampton Roads. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 4:20. Off at 4:25. Two-dollar mutuels paid—JIMMY SUTRO, $25.60, $8.20, $3.50; CURACAO, $3.20, $2.40; SPRINGSTEEL, $2.90.

JIMMY SUTRO, rated along in the early stages and kept in reserve for the first six furlongs, moved to the leaders rapidly when put to urging, took command when ready and was under restraint at the finish. CURACAO, kept under pressure from the start, withstood repeated efforts from SPRINGSTEEL, and then continued courageously, but unable to withstand the winner. SPRINGSTEEL, a keen factor, made determined challenges in the final half mile and held on stoutly. OLD MASTER, forced very wide at the first turn, could not make up any ground in the final drive. BERTJOHN was blocked and forced back by OLD MASTER when entering the back stretch. SNAPBACK had no excuses.

FIFTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $2,500 added. The Harford Handicap. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate for all but Okapi. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:55. Off at 5 p. m. Winner, G. H. Bostwick's b. c. (4), by Pompey—Elvina. Trained by J. P. Smith. Value to winner, $1,800; second, $500; third, $250; fourth, $100. Time, 0:23 1-5, 0:46 2-5, 1:11 4-5.

POMPEIUS, a keen factor from the start, raced FINITE into submission, drew clear when straightened into the home stretch and held CON AMORE safe under pressure. CON AMORE, squeezed back when leaving the back stretch, secured racing room on the inside when entering the home stretch and closed gamely. SCOTCH GOLD, steadied for the first half mile, finished strongly in the final drive. PILATE moved up strongly midway of the turn, but was allowed to go wide thereafter and finished on his own courage. FINITE forced a fast pace early. TRED AVON met with interference directly after the start and could not reach contention. CANRON also met with interference. OSCULATOR weakened after five furlongs. OKAPI propped with the break and was left.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 5:30. Off at 5:33½. Winner, J. J. Two-dollar mutuels paid—GLIDELIA, $7.80, $4.80, $3.90; RACCOON, $13.60, $9.40; PARDEE, $5.00.

GLIDELIA, kept close to the leaders and on the outside, took command when midway of the final turn and moving clear finished with much in reserve. RACCOON, hurried to the front and steadied while saving ground, held on with good energy after losing command. PARDEE, under urging throughout, was gaining steadily in the final stages when placed to punishment. MERRY FOX lost ground the last half mile. SEA FOX began tiring after six furlongs. ROYAL RUFFIN lacked his closing rush after galloping along strongly in the early racing.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 6:04. Off at 6:06½. Winner, C. O. Ferguson's b. g. (5), by Under Fire—Princess Adele. Trained by W. H. Denham. Value to winner, $625; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 0:24 2-5, 0:49 2-5, 1:14 3-5, 1:40 3-5, 1:47 3-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—NIGHT PATROL, $13.70, $8.20, $6.50; EVEN UP, $5.60, $3.80; PRINCE ABBOT, $5.90.

NIGHT PATROL, working his way up on the outside and poorly handled, responded gamely when placed to punishment and finished gamely, was up in the final sixteenth. EVEN UP dropped back going to the first turn, was rushed hard when settled on the back stretch to reach contention, then slipped through on the inside for the final drive and was going stoutly. PRINCE ABBOT, in the thick of contention, weakened when nearing the finish. MARCASITE could not make up any ground after reaching a forward position. TUFFY G. met with early trouble. He closed fast when clear. CLOUDY DAY was used up racing with COVENTRY QUEEN. ALCMAN was done early. ROWDY BOY raced in dull fashion.

RAINES GETS BOUT WITH ZAHARIAS

Rough Customers to Clash Thursday at Auditorium.

ANOTHER rough and tumble match, similar to the one staged last week—it is hoped, has been arranged by Promoter Joe Turner for his weekly mat show at the Auditorium Thursday, it was revealed last night. Dick Raines, late of Texas, and George Zaharias, who hails from the canyons of Colorado, are billed in the feature match.

Turner was prepared to give Everett Marshall an opportunity in the main go with Zaharias after the two struggled for 30 minutes to no avail last week, but Raines injected his ponderous frame into the picture, and matter-of-factly announced that nothing would suit him better than a chance to toss Mrs. Zaharias' boy around for a few minutes.

Greek Able to Take Care of Himself.

Not exactly a shrinking violet himself, the big Greek should be able to take care of himself. George is one of the best rough men in the business when he wants to be. He cuffed Marshall around quite a bit, but that was just a warm-up, and he should be prepared to suppy Mr. Raines with all the roughing he wants.

The principal preliminary brings together Hans Steinke and Rudy Dusek in a 30-minute affair, which will be preceded by another 30-minute bout between Marshall Blackstock and Vic Christy.

15,000 Watch Ladysman Triumph

Metcalf's silks across the finish line a length and a half clear of Jubal. The latter, coupled with the winner as the Metcalf-Grayson entry, took place from Bright Haben by six lengths. Jubal stole a long early lead from the large field of juveniles, but gave way to Snappy Story's closing bid in a mild drive. The entry paid $16.70 for $2.

Johnny Gilbert, ace American jockey for 1932, made it two in a row when he piloted the long shot Butter Beans first home in the second event. The $50.20-for-$2 shot easily beat On Tap, the choice, by two lengths. Ladino was a close third. On Tap took the lead from Chain in the first quarter mile. Butter Beans rushed up after breaking a bit slowly and, overtaking On Tap entering the stretch, won going away.

Jimmy Sutro, fresh from a New Orleans campaign, fooled the talent by registering an easy triumph in the fourth race, returning $25.60, Curacao, the favorite, was beaten a good three lengths while saving the place from Springsteel by a head. The latter pair raced head and head all the way, Curacao holding the lead until Jimmy Sutro moved forward with a rush rounding into the stretch.

Glidelia took the sixth and Night Patrol, paying $13.70, won the last race by a half length. Even Up took the place by the same margin from Prince Abbot.

Meets Irving

BOXING BITS Hereabouts

FAR from discouraged because of his defeat at the hands of Maxie Rosenbloom in their light-heavyweight championship bout at Madison Square Garden last month, Bob Godwin, of the Georgia Godwins, strolls about his recently purchased home in Herald Harbor, looking forward to the day when once again he will come to grips with the man who deprived him of his N. B. A. laurels.

To Godwin fell the misfortune of losing to Slapsie Maxie by a technical knockout—one of the few fighters to go down to defeat at the hands of the champion in such fashion.

Like the wandering parents of Billy Stribling, a cousin of Bob, Pa and Ma Godwin have been following the fortunes of their son with the greatest of interest, and even today maintain that their boy will mount to the top before he hangs up his gloves permanently.

Seated around the open fire in the living room of their home at a housewarming, Ma Godwin had this to say about our Bob:

"We don't think of that defeat any more. If it hadn't been for the bum eye, Robert might have had the chance of his life. He has fought Rosenbloom enough to know him inside and out, and he came to his corner at the end of the third round convinced that Maxie was not in condition to go fifteen rounds. Robert was slow in starting and lost the first round, but sports writers agree that he won the second and third and was in front in the fourth, when they stopped the match."

Up steps Pa to fire back at those who criticized him for letting his son fight with such a badly cut eye.

"On the first day of training in New York a cut we thought had healed began to look bad. Jimmy Johnston recommended a doctor, and we got a first-class one. He looked the eye over carefully and said it would give no trouble, if it got no worse.

"The Friday preceding the fight the eye was looked over and pronounced O. K., but it looked rather bad; so it was thought advisable for Bob to keep his hat on and well over his forehead when introduced from the ring at the Jeby-Dundee fight.

"The day before the fight, the wound was reopened. We went to the Garden to see the physician. We were told by Garden officials that to call the fight off meant a waste of money for publicity, a substitution would kill the card, but they stated that if the commission doctor pronounced him fit to fight he would have to forfeit $5,000, which had been posted to guarantee his appearance.

"Standing ten feet away from Bob the commission doctor pronounced him ok. We weighed in at 2 p. m. Friday, the day of the fight, and an hour or so later the doctor who had originally worked on the eye had to take four stitches in it. He plastered up both eyes, so Rosenbloom wouldn't know which one was cut. But, Max soon slapped both plasters off—and there you have it."

Bob Godwin is confident he can take Rosenbloom in a return bout. The family, it is understood, is preparing a $3,000 guarantee, which the champion has asked for another title shot by the Georgian.

And says Bob:

"If they hadn't stopped the fight in New York, I would have won, bad eye or no bad eye. If this sounds like an alibi, don't quote me. I've never alibied yet, and I'm not starting now."

Godwin, it is understood, received over $1,500 for four rounds, which is nothing to sneeze at even for a Garden bout these days. Bob's popularity has not diminished any in this section. Local promoters will give him first consideration when they set in motion the wheels of the outdoor ring industry.

A fighter of the caliber of Tommy Loughran, or maybe Loughran himself, would be good to pit against Godwin. A match with Joe Knight, who turned over his crown to Godwin, would attract a large crowd.

Rivals Battle On Portner Program

Van and Irving Meet in Final; Reed on Brilliant Card.

THE fistic spotlight will be turned on Portner's Arena in Alexandria Tuesday night when Young Van and Henry Irving renew their rivalry in a 10-round final for the District middleweight championship, which has the whole town talking. Intersectional interest, which was keen before they battled to a sensational draw a month ago, is now at fever heat.

Southwest is willing to bet its shirt that Van will knock Irving out of his shoes and Northeast is equally as confident that Irving will get over his famous knockout punch in this second meeting. At their respective camps yesterday, the boys were nearing the end of their training.

Van went through his paces at the Mohawk Club with Ray Bowen opposing him, while Irving, under the watchful eye of Harry Groves, worked hard at Frank Mann's gymnasium.

Others Working Hard.

Other fighters who will team to make Tuesday night's show the feature program of the year, were brushing up on their punches at the various fight centers about the city.

Like the main bout, the supporting battles are boiling over with rivalry. In the semiwindup, Nick Antonelli, from the Mohawk forces, meets Willie Essinger, of the Mann forces. In the main preliminary, Roy Manley, of the Mann outfit, meets Jimmy Reed, who did most of his fighting hereabouts at Twin City. Then there's the Jackie Simpson-Baltimore Harry Groves battle and the opening four.

So great is the interest smoked up over the return clash between Van and Irving, that Portner's officials are predicting perhaps the largest crowd of the season.

Both fighters are possessed of knockout powers as attested by the smashing manner in which they put away their opponents shortly after embarking on their fistic careers, and the so-called ring experts believe that if either catches the other off balance and with his defense slightly open, one of the knockout kings is going to experience a brief sleep in slumberland.

Van Was Once Amateur.

Van, who was graduated from the amateur ranks, crashed into his first six opponents with such terrific punches that none survived the distance. K. O. Burns and Sammy Britt [illegible] decisions to the strong-armed stereotyper, who followed with [illegible] knockout over Johnny Adams.

Van's [illegible] entered the scene. It was Sammy Britt, who twice won via the [illegible] in the first round, but Van made such a noble improvement that it is [illegible] ful if Britt could stand the [illegible] in the ring with the stereotyper today.

CRONIN PLAYING FIGURES AND HUNCHES IN MANAGING NATS

YouthfulPilot Holds Daily Conclave

Points Out Rivals' Weaknesses to All Players on Club.

Eats, Talks, Sleeps Baseball in Search for New Ideas.

By FRANK H. YOUNG.

IF this Joe Cronin, who right now is taking a fling at managing the Washington Baseball Club, ever decides to quit baseball, there should be a job for him somewhere in the "efficiency expert" business. The San Francisco "keed" is the type of fellow who tries to be prepared for all emergencies, who leaves nothing to chance and who, if it were possible, would think the Nats to a pennant.

Joe reads, thinks and talks baseball and then each night lays in bed a while and digests the ideas and thoughts which he has gathered together while on his feet. He knows the history, weaknesses and strong points of all of his charges, even to their little mental idiosyncrasies, and is willing to humor them whenever possible. He has hunches—and plays them—and at the same time is always figuring how to cope with the other fellow, either as a team or individually.

Each Game Is Planned.

As the Nationals are being piloted this year, there is no hit-or-miss baseball played. Before each game, a meeting is held in the locker-room and Pilot Joe takes the score card and discusses each individual player in the enemy line-up. Their batting weakness, if any, is pointed out, and not only the pitcher who will toil that day but every member of the Nat cast is told just what kind of balls will be pitched to each alien hitter.

In baseball, the percentage is that certain type hitters will hit a given type of pitching in a general direction and, as a result of these meetings, the players—and this includes the infield, too—shift their positions accordingly. In a way, it is stealing a page from Connie Mack's book on "The Scorecard Wig-Wag," but Joe thinks that it is an improvement on the veteran White Elephant mahout's system, in that his men move about without having to be told.

Cronin Studies Batters.

Although still a comparative youngster in the game, Joe knows just what type balls all of the enemy batters figure to have the most trouble hitting. And he is continually studying new ideas on the subject or revising those he already has. At games, home fans will note that he usually is first on the field and that he makes it a point always to watch the visiting team's hitting practice from his own dugout.

As to his own pitchers, Cronin has carefully studied the records of last year and plans to arrange his assignments that those most effective against certain teams will face them as often as possible. In other words, he'll pick the spots for his pitchers.

The Nats' boy leader played his first hunch yesterday when he started Monte Weaver against the Red Sox. The records showed that the former Virginia math professor beat the Athletics five out of six games last year, but they also showed that Weaver started a truly great season by opening against the Cape Cod boys. Here Joe had to choose between the hunch and the effectiveness records.

And what did he do? Why he figured that the good start against the Red Sox might have had something to do with Weaver's later victories over the A's, so he turned over Friday's assignment against the Philadelphians to Walter Stewart and saved the professor for the Red Sox yesterday.

As a rule, however, Joe is going to stick to the records, he says.

"I realize that it is generally the team that makes the manager," he explained, "but I think the manager can help considerably by figuring out the opponents' weaknesses and playing to them—and that's what I'm trying to do. I may not make a go of it, but you can't blame a fellow for trying."

Georgetown Churches Reorganize Tuesday

The Georgetown Church Baseball League will hold its second meeting of the year Tuesday at 7:30 o'clock at Peck Memorial Chapel, at which time plans will be completed for the approaching season.

Teams were represented at the initial confab, Mount Vernon, Eldbrook, West Washington Baptist, East Washington Heights Baptist, Calvary Baptist and Centennial Baptist. Any church teams in the city desiring to enter a team are requested to be represented Tuesday.

FEDERAL LEAGUE READY.

The Federal Baseball League, a new loop composed of Government teams, yesterday announced its complete schedule for the season. Seventy-five games are listed, opening with the Public Documents-G. P. O. fray on June 5 and closing on September 2 with the Civil Service-Public Documents game.

All games will be played on the Monument Grounds. Teams entered in addition to those mentioned above are Bookbinders, A. G. O. and U. S. Airways.

Wrestle Head Sees Londos as Champ

Savoldi Refused Recognition by National Mat Body.

Clarksdale, Miss., April 15 (A.P.).—Commenting on the Chicago match in which Joe Savoldi was awarded a fall over James Londos, Col. H. J. Landry, of Friar Point, Miss., president of the National Wrestling Association, said today that so far as the association is concerned, Londos is still the heavyweight champion of the world.

Landry said Savoldi, claimant to the heavyweight title, had been indefinitely suspended by the Indiana State Athletic Commission, for failure to meet Pat O'Shocker, at Evansville, Ind., on April 10. In submitting a report on the Londos fall, the National Association president said that although Joe Managoff, referee in the Londos-Savoldi bout, raised Savoldi's hand, the association could not recognize the fall "inasmuch as information revealed that Londos was not pinned."

He added that the match "was not recognized as a championship one."

Nats to Hold Sandlotters' Classes

Griffith to Instruct Local Youths While Team Is Away.

CLARK GRIFFITH will instigate and manage a free baseball coaching school at the ball park next summer for the sandlotters of Washington.

This sweeping and revolutionary decision on the part of the big league president is the second step he has taken in recent months to bring big league atmosphere closer to the youth of Washington baseball, having already offered the use of the ball park to the high schools for their annual baseball series, and also to Roosevelt High as a practice grounds.

But his latest move stands out as the most ambitious and constructive step Griffith, ever something of a pioneer, has attempted since coming to Washington a generation ago to resuscitate baseball in the Capital.

Present Plans to Make History.

In 1918 Griffith distributed something in the neighborhood of $165,000 worth of balls and bats and other baseball equipment to the Army camps all over the country. His present move promises to go down in baseball history along with that far flung endeavor.

The Griffith coaching school will be perhaps the most thorough thing of its kind ever attempted, and, of course, the biggest bargain ever offered the young (and old for that matter) amateur players of Washington. Griffith will be a sort of benign dean of this tuitionless school, assisted by a faculty of experts composed of regular members of the team.

The school will open shortly after the public and parochial schools close late in June. "Sessions" will be held in the afternoons when the team is away from home, with Griffith on hand to dispense pitching, hitting, sliding, baserunning and flyhawking tips. In these afternoon classes, when the team is on the road, the Nat prexy proposes to have the sandlotters choose up sides and play regulation games, with accredited umpires who would offer their services free. The players themselves would be expected to bring their own equipment, but Griffith would supply the balls.

Morning Classes When Nats Are Home.

When the team is home, Griffith plans to switch his classes to the morning and have more specialized drills. For instance, Joe Kuhel will tell the secrets of playing first base; Buddy Myer the art of playing second base; Joe Cronin, tips on playing short and perhaps managing, and so on all around the team, with a special class on long hitting by Goose Goslin, and actual demonstrations in sliding, the hit and run play and the various inside bits of strategy, all of them performed by men who rate with the leading exponents of the game.

The class will be open to every player in town. Although the central idea is to give sort of individual instructions on the game, informal games will be played regularly and after a while it is possible that several different sized teams might be formed for games against Capital City League and other recognized local sandlot associations.

TENNIS GETS SCHOOL PLAY

Netmen in 7 of 12 Events on Week's High Program.

A COUPLE of coming-out parties feature the rather meager high school menu this week. Tech's track team will be unwrapped and displayed for the first time this season at Alexandria, where it runs against Episcopal Friday, and Eastern's 1933 model baseball team will be tested on the trial grounds of the Naval Academy at Annapolis with a group of Plebe engineers doing the testing.

Twelve events make the program appear to be healthy and robust, but seven of these are in the nature of tennis matches and will not cut much of a swath in scholastic circles.

Roosevelt Nine Active.

Roosevelt breaks out in a rash of baseball Tuesday and Wednesday, encountering Alexandria and Emerson, respectively, both games to be played at Potomac Park. Aside from these brief sallies, the tennis players have the field to themselves.

The majority of matches will be counted in Prep School League standings, although there are a couple that have no bearing on the race. Gonzaga visits Landon tomorrow in the initial match. Both Central and Western will be in Baltimore Saturday; Central for a bit of volleying with Forest Park and Western at Mount St. Joseph's.

It will be interesting to see how Tech fares against Episcopal in view of the fact that the lads from across the smiling Potomac already boast a win over Eastern. Tech's colors will be borne by a group of inexperienced but promising youngsters, the majority of whom have competed only in playground and junior high school meets.

Gonzaga at Landon (tennis).
TUESDAY.
Roosevelt vs. Alexandria (baseball), Monument Grounds.
WEDNESDAY.
Roosevelt vs. Emerson (baseball), Monument Grounds.
Eastern at Episcopal (baseball).

SATURDAY.

Eastern vs. Navy Plebes (baseball), at Annapolis.
Central vs. Forest Park (tennis), at Baltimore.

Reynolds Is Named Boys Club Director

Charlie Reynolds, former athletic director of the Knights of Columbus, has been appointed athletic director of the Boys Club of Washington, succeeding Harry Child, Director Charles Pyfe announced last night. Child has entered business in Baltimore.

Well known among the city's athletes, Reynolds is arranging an attractive spring and summer program for the members of the club. Club hours during the Easter holidays are from 2 p. m. to 10 p. m., with an hour intermission between 5 and 6 p. m.

Potomac Crew Talent To Report Tomorrow

All candidates for the Potomac Boat Club rowing and canoeing crews will report tomorrow evening for preliminary training in preparation for one of the most strenuous schedules ever undertaken by a group of local oarsmen. The crews will be directed by Coach Clarence Hecox and Capt. Joe Scannell.

Brower, Marden, Donohue and Nutwell, comprising the crew that captured the Middle States rowing championship last year, are among those expected to report. Brower has been on the water all winter, training for the association single event in the Philadelphia Regatta to be contested May 29.

The national championship crews of Long and Shorb, single blade tandem; Long, Miller, Shorb and Kelso, junior and intermediate fours, are also expected to report.

WOLTZ NINE IN INAUGURAL.

Woltz Photographers, who are entered in the pennant race of the Capital City League, will open their season today at 3 o'clock, meeting the Virginia White Sox on the latter's field. Under the Woodley A. C. banner last year the Photographers made a commendable record.

WEAVER SETS BACK BOSTON WITH 5 HITS

perate mitt into which the ball plunked with a plunk that was sweet music to the 4,000 who braved the chill of the drab afternoon.

The Sox had the bit in their teeth all afternoon, especially the diminutive Rabbit Warstler out at shortstop, who had an unlimited cruising range and gathering in ground balls with an ease that made Joe Cronin look like a busher.

Weaver Helped Self As Fielder.

If the Lord helps those who help themselves then Monte Weaver carved himself a nice niche within the pearly gates. The Nats had five infielders out there in the diamond with Weaver in the box. Monte had six assists to his credit, turning the first one into a smart double play in the first inning.

The Nats punctured Rhodes' delivery in the second inning when Schulte rifled a single into center and stretched it to two bases when Johnson attempted to relay the ball back before he picked it up. He clattered home when Ossie Bluege singled to right field to the surprise of everybody, including Bluege.

The piece de resistance, however, from an offensive viewpoint, was the swat by Goose Goslin in the sixth that rattled against the corner in deep center field for three bases. The Goose ankled home with the run when Schulte slammed the first pitch into right for a single.

Weaver scattered the Sox's five hits over five different innings, but he was in distress only in the ninth after Alexander's homer had reduced the Nats' lead to 2-1 in the seventh.

Manager McManus, with one out, clouted a single to right in the last inning, but was forced by Watwood. Weaver solved the Alexander problem by walking him after getting in a hole, and the winning run was on base, but Goslin came through nobly when Johnson's line drive into right threatened to drop safely to the extent of several bases.

backwards when he returns to the line-up.

Rabbit Warstler made a snappy play when he hustled over almost to second for Sewell's grass-cutter and made the out at first on a rifle shot.

Jumbo Alexander gave the half-frozen fans a laugh starting the home third when he let Kuhel's bunt trickle through his legs. By grabbing it in one hand and stretching the other to the sack while lying prone, he gained the umpire's decision by a whisker.

McManus tried to steal second while Weaver held the ball in the sixth, but he did not quite make it. Just in the interest of fair play, Bluege did the same thing in the home half—and with the same results.

A bad bounder from Manush's bat almost made cider of Hodapp's Adam's apple in the eighth. The second-sacker, after juggling the ball about a bit, made the out at first.

DUNBAR REGULARS WIN.

The Dunbar High varsity yesterday took a practice game from the Yannigans, 5 to 3.

Three games are listed for the Poets this week. On Wednesday, the Training School will be met on the latter's field, while the Minor A. C. and the Dunbar alumni will be engaged Friday and Saturday, respectively, both games to be played at Walker Stadium.

LARGE FIELD IN WOMEN'S PIN PLAY

Association Hopes to Set Record for May 1 Event.

LEAVING no stones unturned to attain a record entry, Lorraine Gulli and a corps of able and enterprising assistants are working overtime these days to gain this end for the twelfth annual tournament of the Washington Women's Duckpin Association, which opens at the Lucky Strike Alleys, May 1.

When the road seemed the roughest and no other girl leader cared to tackle the job, Washington's own foremost queen of the maple paths stepped into the breach as chief executive with a willingness that bespeaks of her own indomitable spirit that has been so much a part of her brilliant career.

Aims to Obtain Record Entry.

Three years ago, as secretary, Miss Gulli played no little part in helping the spring meet reach its biggest team, doubles and singles entry. Her aim as president is to outstrip that record with a possible entry of 55 teams, 75 doubles and 130 singles.

Reports coming in from Secretary Maude Youmans are that the ladies District League is entered en masse, with the Washington ladies loop coming in likewise. A greater part of the Federal League and eight teams or more from the Eastern Star are almost a certainty.

But the success of the event will be the support received from the Class C and D teams. Many are found in the Commerce, Internal Revenue, C. & P. Telephone, Independent and suburban leagues, including Hyattsville, Mount Rainier, Rosslyn and Bethesda.

Here Miss Gulli will bend every effort to interest them. And as she explained, "Many girls that come under these classifications have never had the real spirit of the organization put in a way that would be inviting to them."

The deadline for entries is midnight, Saturday, April 22.

Occidental Bowlers Lose to Baltimoreans

The Recreation pinmen of Baltimore squeezed out a victory over the Occidental Team of Washington in the final block of their ten-game match rolled last night at Lucky Strike. The final tabulation revealed the visitors ahead by a score of 3,078 to 3,065.

Keys rolled high game, 160, and high set, 690, for the Baltimoreans, while Astor Clarke had the best game for the home team, 137, one pin more than Maxie Rosenberg, whose 623 set was high.

Honors Are Paid Tennyson, 15 Years With Playground

RICHARD S. (DICK) TENNYSON, assistant superintendent of the Municipal Playground Department, yesterday was the recipient of a handsome set of dress studs, the gift of coworkers in recognition of his 15 years in the department.

Mr. Tennyson was appointed assistant director of Garfield Playground in April, 1918. The following year saw him given full charge of the playground. He is credited with inventing "tin-can" golf, forerunner of miniature golf.

In June, 1923, he was named director of boys' activities. He organized and conducted the first interplayground meet, now an annual feature of the summer program, participated in by more than 15,000 boys.

He is the organizer and director of playground and elementary school leagues in baseball, soccer and basket ball, and had an active role in the founding of the Capital City League, of which he is now president, and of the Washington Southeastern District Soccer Association, acting as first president of that body.

An ardent sportsman, Tennyson captured the coveted Clelland Cup, awarded the winner of the annual sports writers golf tournament, in 1931.

Olympic Mermaid Star at Shoreham

Miss Rawls in Diving Exhibition; Beats D. C. Aces Despite Handicaps.

Fifteen-year-old Katherine Rawls, stopping over here en route to the national indoor swimming championships at Buffalo, demonstrated last night at the Venetian pool of the Shoreham Hotel why she is the holder of six national and four world's championship records.

The 100-pound, bronzed, freckle-faced girl, who beat Georgia Coleman in the Olympic tryouts and placed second in the finals of the diving event, exhibited six difficult dives off the high board, in which her famous "flying Dutchman," or half Gainor, was the most spectacular. This is the dive that won the little lady 9½ points in the Olympics.

Little Miss Rawls gave Leonore Taube a 12-second advantage in the 150-yard medley and won by 10 feet. She spotted Rita Augusterfer, District champion; Annabelle Whaler and Betty O'Toole 12 seconds in the 220-yard free style and emerged the winner by 15 feet.

ST. JOSEPH'S TO PLAY.

St. Joseph's A. C. will play the Hecht Co. tossers this morning at 11 o'clock in a game on No. 7 diamond. St. Joseph's will seek the Capital League pennant while the store nine is entered in the Department Store League.

Bucs Down Cubs, 6-4, in Overtime

Chicago, April 15 (A.P.).—A tenth inning flurry of extra base hits at the expense of Relief Pitcher Burleigh Grimes, gave the Pittsburgh Pirates a 6-to-4 victory over the Cubs in their series opener here today.

With the score 4-all, Lindstrom opened the extra inning with a triple to deep center and Paul Waner immediately followed with a three-bagger to right. Traynor then doubled to right to count the final run. Henshaw replaced Grimes, but it was too late.

Grimes went into the game in the eighth inning, after Charley Root, who had started against Heine Meine, gave way to a pinch hitter in the seventh when the Cubs scored three runs on five straight hits and took a momentary 4 to 3 lead. Singles by Traynor and Vaughan, sandwiched around a sacrifice, tied it up in the eighth. In all, the Pirates got eleven hits, including a home run by Vaughan with none on in the fourth. The Cubs got 12 in all off Meine and Bill Harris, who succeeded him and was the winning pitcher. Billy Herman got four of them, all singles.

A crowd of not more than 5,000 shivered through the game, which was played in a temperature somewhat under 40 degrees.

Lean College Sports Week For D. C.

G.W. Netmen in Only Event Here of Nine Listed.

EASTER WEEK means just a lot of egg rolling for most of the local college boys. The week shames Old Mother Hubbard's cupboard in bareness for, of the nine contests scheduled, only one, George Washington's tennis match with Lafayette, is for home consumption.

It is a sad commentary on these sad times when one considers that Easter week meant games with Harvard, Princeton, Yale and other institutions prominent in intercollegiate athletic warfare in former years. But deemphasis and depression have frightened off the invaders and the majority of local schools simply hang up the "Gone to lunch" sign for the week and those that do remain are obliged to travel for the sake of competition.

Old Line Nine Off for Trip South.

University of Maryland's representatives have a hand in the remaining eight contests. The Terp diamond squad departs today for a swing through the South, opening tomorrow against Duke's Mixtures at Durham. Games with North Carolina, Virginia, Richmond and William and Mary complete the itinerary.

The College Park netmen appear on the scene Friday at Westminister as guests of the Western Maryland team, and Saturday the track and lacrosse forces will be marshaled for an assault on the Middies' stronghold at Annapolis.

A couple of rubberized pitchers to stretch over the week is the crying need of Coach Burton Shipley. The batters hammered the offerings of a trio of Penn State twirlers to all corners of the pasture for a 13-to-8 victory Friday, and there is little worry concerning the offense, but the hurlers evidenced a lack of durability.

Trackmen Face Tests At Navy.

The trackmen, too, came through in fairly good style to outrun the University of Richmond boys, but there was a decided difference between the sprint department and field endeavor branch. The sprinters had a big edge on their rivals and clinched the meet with their point-gathering, but the field men just managed to squeeze by.

Navy is known to be strong in field events and provide keen competition on the cinder path.

Emerson Nine Wins Over Episcopal, 8-1

Special to The Washington Post.

Alexandria, Va., April 15.—Timely hitting, coupled with the poor fielding of the local team, enabled Emerson Institute to defeat Episcopal High School by a score of 8 to 1 in their game here today.

Emerson jumped on Watson for four runs in the opening frame, and with this lead was never overhauled by the home team. The visitors solved the Episcopal hurler's offerings to the extent of getting eight hits, with Minor and Whalen leading the attack.

Carlin held Episcopal to five well-scattered blows.

SUTTER OUTSTEADIES LOTT TO WIN NORTH-SOUTH FINALS

Southern Lad Triumphs in 3 Sets

Stoefen-Grant Defeat Mangin-Bell for Doubles Title.

PINEHURST, N. C., April 15 (A.P.).—Playing faultless tennis, Clifford Sutter, of New Orleans, the Nation's third ranking star, today won the fifteenth annual North and South tennis championship by defeating George M. Lott, jr., of Chicago, rated eleventh, in straight sets, 6—3, 7—5, 6—2.

Mrs. John Van Ryn, of Philadelphia, retained her women's singles title by turning back Mrs. Philip B. Hawk, of New York, 6—1, 6—1.

Mrs. Van Ryn teamed with her husband to defeat Miss Eliza Coxe, of Asheville, and Berkeley Bell, of Austin, Tex., 6—2, 6—2, to win the mixed doubles crown.

Stoefen-Grant Men's Doubles Kings.

Lester Stoefen, of Los Angeles, and Bryan Grant, of Atlanta, defeated Bell and Gregory Mangin, of Newark, N. J., 7—9, 7—5, 8—6, 6—1, for the men's doubles title.

In the men's singles finals Sutter was the master except for a brief period in the first set when Lott led 3-1. The Southerner then began to outsteady his opponent. He maneuvered Lott around with his placements until he gained an opening and then was quick to seize its advantage.

In the second set, Sutter led, 3-2, when rain called a brief halt. They resumed play shortly and each won his service until the twelfth when Sutter broke through to take the set.

They split the first four games of the final set and Sutter won service to lead 3-2. Lott double faulted the first two points on the next game and couldn't catch up thereafter. Sutter was at 40-love in the final, yielded one point and then won the match as Lott double faulted again.

Sutter Seldom Applied Best Speed.

Sutter did not apply speed except on rare occasions, while Lott hit harder than usual, especially in the second set which he came closest to winning.

Sutter's victory places him high among those under consideration for the United States Davis Cup team. The win also gave him the edge in total matches with Lott, Sutter having won four of the seven matches he and Lott have played.

Amity Club to Stage Father-Son Program

Members of the Amity Club will stage their annual Father and Son night program Monday, April 24, at the Jewish Community Center, with Joe Cronin and other members of the Washington baseball club as their guests. All of the boys of the Jewish Foster Home have also been invited.

An entertaining program, including wrestling and boxing, has been arranged by the committee in charge of the affair.

G. W. Netmen Bow To Hopkins, 7 to 2

Special to The Washington Post.

Baltimore, Md., April 15.—Dropping only a pair of singles matches, the Johns Hopkins Tennis Team defeated the George Washington University netmen, 7 to 2, at Homewood today.

Raphael Sherfy, No. 1 of the Colonials, downed Palitz, 10—8 and 6—4, while a mate of the former, Reuben Moore, conquered Dietz in a contest that went three sets.

Ted Pierce and Ken Murayana, of the visitors, teamed up twice in doubles and lost both times.

SINGLES—R. Sherfy (George Washington) defeated Palitz, 10—8, 6—4; Siverd (Hopkins) defeated L. Sherfy, 6—1, 6—1; Brooke (Hopkins) defeated Pierce, 7—5, 7—5; Hartman (Hopkins) defeated Robinson, 6—4, default; Moore (George Washington) defeated Dietz, 7—5, 1—6, 6—2; Ladensky (Hopkins) defeated Smith, 7—9, 7—5, 6—4.

DOUBLES—Brooke and Palitz (Hopkins) defeated R. Sherfy and L. Sherfy, 6—2, 6—3; Siverd and Hartman (Hopkins) defeated Pierce and Murayana, 6—4, 6—2; Goldberg and Rains (Hopkins) defeated Pierce and Murayana, 7—5, 6—3.

NAVY CREW BOWS IN SEASON'S DEBUT

favored the oarsmen. They rowed against a slight tide, however, a little stronger in the final race.

In the junior race, the Navy secured a lead of a third of a length in the first quarter of a mile. Princeton, by hitting its stroke as high as 42 to the minute at times, was able to cut the lead to a quarter of a length, but the Navy forced its boat a half length ahead as the line was crossed.

Princeton Boat Always In Front.

Princeton, rowing at 40 to the minute at the start, sprang into a quarter of a length lead, which at the half mile it had pulled out to a half length. From that point to the mile Princeton gradually pushed ahead, and was three-quarters of a length to the good at that point.

With a quarter of a mile to go, the Navy oarsmen began to pull up, and 300 yards from the finish they had pushed the nose of their boat to within 10 feet of their opponents.

The opposing oarsmen were boated as follows:

NAVY VARSITY—Stone, stroke, 178; Hood, 7, 176; McLain, 6, 180; Klinsman, 5, 180; Wendt (captain), 4, 177; Weeks, 3, 177; McMahon, 2, 174; J. V. Smith, bow, 172; Kruisk, coxswain, 122. Average weight, excluding coxswain, 176¾.

CLIFF SUTTER

SPEAKING —OF— TENNIS

TENNIS activities along the Middle Atlantic front will swing under way tomorrow at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., where the nation's premier players will assemble to compete in the thirteenth annual Mason and Dixon tournament.

Washington's lone representative is Tom Mangan, who has been keeping in condition all winter, wielding his pet racket with Paul Heston, the professional.

Arrayed against a field from which will be combed the 1933 Davis Cup squad, Mangum is not expected to be among the favorites, but his District friends contend that he will offer his opponents many anxious moments.

A steady back court player—one of the best in the Middle Atlantic sector—Mangan made none other than the celebrated Bill Tilden sit up and take notice at the skill with which he handled the racket during a match some time back.

Lawrence A. Baker, member of the United States Lawn Tennis Association, and member of the Davis Cup committee, will go to White Sulphur either tomorrow or Tuesday to help in selecting the Davis Cup players.

The play of the stars this week will go a long ways toward determining who will be chosen to represent America in this season's matches. Wilmer Allison, who starred with John Van Ryn in the doubles, will probably take over the number one singles berth, with George Lott teaming with Van Ryn. Frank Shields and Cliff Sutter are certain to get the call.

Washington has not had a tennis player among the first ten since the days of Connie Doyle, of Columbia Country Club. It has been a decade since he last distinguished himself on the courts.

The latest star to zoom across the tennis horizon is Frankie Parker, 17-year-old New Orleans player, whose victories over Cliff Sutter and George Lott in the Houston invitation tournament pushed him into national prominence. He will be given serious consideration in the Davis Cup selections this week.

Bill Shreve, the nonplaying captain of the Wardman Park champions of the Capital City League, expects to have his 1932 team intact when the season opens a week from today. Frank Shore, Anthony Latona, Gilbert Hunt and Dick Mason will be ready for duty at the net, Shreve reports.

Should the Davis Cup matches at Chevy Chase be called off next month, Washington will be deprived of its most important tennis event of the season. The presence of the outstanding players of the country always attracts tremendous crowds.

FOUR COAST RACES TO WASHINGTON U.

ington set its stroke up and the race was over.

The collegians outnumbered the other athletes on the course but husky tars from the United States Navy furnished one of the most exciting races of the day when racing cutters from five warships matched strokes for the naval championship at 2,000 meters. The U. S. S. Oklahoma won the grueling race by half a length. The Arizona was second with the Lexington, the 3-mile champion of the Navy, third. Arkansas was fourth, and California, a flagship, last.

Sailors Make Speed In Cutters.

The winning time was 9 minutes 10.7 seconds, fast time for boats not built for speed.

Washington's four-oared crew won the closest race of the regatta, its margin over California being no more than 3 feet.

Rock Creek's Open Golf Feature

Tourney Play Starts Here Tuesday; News of D. C. Links.

THE cream of Washington's public links talent will mobilize Tuesday morning at Rock Creek's rolling course to participate in a golf tournament that Manager Harry Graham has called the Rock Creek open—a tournament that is the first of its type ever conducted at the club and which will be staged annually.

Late entries yesterday swelled the list of contestants to close to the century mark, and before teeing-off time for the 18-hole qualifying round Tuesday more than 125 players are expected to be on the firing line.

Pairings and starting times, announced yesterday by Manager Graham, give Frank Ward, Robert J. Marks and Andrew Oliveri the honor of playing first at 8:30 o'clock. Other threesomes will follow at five-minute intervals. Following the medal round, match play will commence on Wednesday, with two matches to be held that day and two more on Thursday.

Number of Flights Not Determined.

The number of flights will depend on the amount of entrants, although seven divisions of players are expected to vie for golf merchandise to be given by Rock Creek.

It will be three d'ys of grand golf for the pay-as-you-go boys, who long have waited for the opportunity to display their wares this season. The tournament is the first of the season in the District.

Volney G. Burnett, winner of the "Uptown" tournament, will be one of the chief contestants. He is paired with H. R. Allen and J. E. Messick and leaves the tee at 10:40. Johnny Connely, youthful municipal sensation; George Marlow, Eddie Ault, Ralph Bennie, local athlete; John Jankowski, Catholic University star, and John Downey, leading amateur in the 1932 National Capital open are among the favorites entered.

Pairings and starting times follow:

First teams from ten clubs affiliated with the District of Columbia Women's Golf Association will vie tomorrow morning at Beaver Dam's course in the second round of the annual competition.

Chevy Chase's feminine brigade carried off top honors in the first event held at Kenwood on April 3.

Golf activities at the Columbia Country Club will get under way Tuesday, with the staging of the annual Boasters' party. Close to 250 golfers are expected to participate. A varied program has been arranged.

It was announced that summer rules will prevail, marking the death of the winter order on the course.

Presiding as chief boaster will be Charles B. White. Others aiding him are Andrew J. Cummings, Hugh H. Saum, Albert R. MacKenzie, and other past presidents.

The Phyllis Keeler Miller Memorial golf tournament for women will be staged at the Washington Golf and Country Club next Thursday. Entries close at noon Tuesday and all expecting to compete should send their names to Mrs. Douglas Tschiffely, 2844 Twenty-eighth street northwest (Phone Adams 9042).

Pairings and starting time will be printed in Wednesday morning papers. The course will be open Tuesday until 12:30 for tournament players who wish to try out the course.

Attention duffers!

The national golf "duffer" tournament, in which 100,000 throughout the country are expected to participate, opened officially in the District. This unique event, put on for the golfer who shoots anywhere from 80 to 100 and up, will continue through June 15, and is backed by the United States Golf Association. A group of prominent golf officials this past winter formed a "Handicap Golfers' Association of America" to promote a national handicap tournament among the club members.

A golfer belonging to any recognized club having its own course may play a round during a specified period. His attested card, along with his club handicap, will be forwarded to national headquarters in New York. Club, State, sectional and national winners will be tabulated.

In announcing its committees for the season, the Maryland State Golf Association has appointed Tom Belshé, of Indian Spring, as one of those serving on the tournament group, and Percival S. Ridsdale, on the senior's committee.

Roger Peacock, District champion, who breezed around in 69 strokes yesterday at his home course after a sizzling 33 on one nine, will team with George Diffenbaugh, pro, against Harry Pitt, Manor champion, and Al Treder, pro, in an eighteen-hole match this afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at Indian Spring.

Two sensational shots caused considerable talk among golfers at Indian Spring yesterday. J. J. Oulahan holed a 185-yard iron shot for an eagle deuce on the fourth, while George Diffenbaugh sank a 220-yard brassie on the twelfth for an eagle two.

ST. JOSEPH'S AHEAD.

Hough, Kenwood, Had 73 9 Months After Golf Debut

ROYCE HOUGH.

Club Champion Has Shot as Low as 67 for 18 Holes.

By DAVE HERMAN.

THAT elongated gentleman of the links, answering to the name of Royce Hough, has been acclaimed champion of the Kenwood Golf and Country Club by right of succession.

Hough, despite a remarkable comeback after being five down going to the twenty-eighth hole, lost to Forrest Thompson in the finals of the title event last fall, but the real champion has resigned from the club, and ever since his departure some seven months ago the Kenwood golfers have looked upon the runner-up as their "champeen."

Although a rather slim fellow, he packs the punch of a heavyweight in his woods, knows how to keep the line and attain tremendous distances with his irons, is a pretty good chipper and cheerfully accepts any suggestions on how to improve his putting. Hough admits his play on the green is perhaps his big weakness.

Played at Other Cities.

Hough's adventures on the links have not been confined solely to the District. Wanderlust sent him out to various sections of the country, and everywhere he stopped he left an indelible impression as regards his golf ability.

Roll back the pages of his history to September of 1922, and you will find Royce Hough at Congressional Country Club with his first set of sticks, listening attentively to instructions from the club's first pro, Jimmy Crabbe, then considered next to Freddie McLeod as the best teacher in this section. Hough took ten lessons from Crabbe before he played his first full round of golf, and he worked on his game industriously.

Nine months later (May 30, 1923), to be exact, Hough had the gods of golf popeyed with amazement. Competing in a Memorial Day tournament, Hough stroked the Congressional course phenomenally, shooting a 38 on the first nine and coming home in 35 for a 73—a new amateur course record. Nine months! And the boy shoots a 73. What kind of game is this golf?

Well this record withstood the firing of the sharpshooters for some time. As he explains, "I was just hot that day."

While failing to win any important tournaments hereabouts, Hough has fared well on other fields. In 1927 he was runner-up in the Dayton Country Club championship, and later won the Miami Valley Invitation from a crack field of Ohio stars.

Hough Played Round Of 67.

Hough has played as low as 67. This was achieved on the 6,000-yard Ebensburgh, Pa., course, and was one below par.

In the Kenwood Club championship last year he was 5 down and 7 to go in his first match with C. P. Medley, and won on the nineteenth. Two down to George Llewellyn, he triumphed on the nineteenth. Shooting a 75 he bounced J. E. Voll into defeat, 5 and 4, and scored twice in the seventies before losing a thriller to Thompson.

Hough made a strong bid for the "Champion of Champions" tournament at Kenwood last year, scoring a 156 to become tied with Harry Pitt, Luther Stewart and Capt. Kendell Fielder for second place. Johnny Miller won by 5 strokes.

Hough also is chairman of the Kenwood golf committee.

Kidwell's Dog Wins At Bradley Heights

Judy, black and white pointer, owned and handled by Frank Kidwell, of this city, won first place in the All Age Stake of the twelfth annual spring trials for bird dogs, staged yesterday at the Saunders Farm at Bradley Heights, Md. The show was under the auspices of the National Capital Field Trial Club.

A second stake, for puppies 15 months and younger, was won by Phil Valiant, white, black and tan Llewellyn setter, owned and handled by Ford E. Young, Bethesda. Ginger Midge, English setter, belonging to G. D. Richardson, Weedonville, Va., was second, and Big Girl, a white pointer, owned by Frank Kidwell, took third prize.

Congressional Lists Ring Bouts Wednesday

A stage entertainment and banquet which will be featured by six boxing matches have been scheduled for members of the Congressional Country Club Wednesday night.

The following boxers will put on exhibitions: Sailor Leonard vs. Whitey Graham, Spike Kelley vs. Johnny May, Jimmy Gallo vs. Sammy Romano, and Jimmy (Kid) Smith vs. Jackie Lamar.

Mackenzie Became a Pro After Weighing His Future

ROLAND MACKENZIE was not satisfied to do things by halves, which consisted of selling insurance or bonds, and attempting to keep up his golf, he said in explaining the reasons why he turned professional.

Writing in the April issue of the Pacific Coast Golfer, the former Columbia Country Club star, who won fame in the Walker Cup and national golf tournaments, declared that golf meant a great deal more to him than he had imagined, adding that after failing to qualify in 1930 for match play in the national amateur championship he resigned a fine position with the Wilmington Trust Co. and came to California with the determination to become a professional.

"I was talked out of it at that time and ended up by working for Howard Hughes, movie director," the present pro at the Broadmoor Country Club at Colorado Springs writes.

"The picture business was certainly interesting, but gave me no chance to myself. The same thing would be true of any business if a person took it seriously.

"While I was laid up, this past summer was the time I made up my mind to take up the game professionally, and let no one talk me out of it."

Orcutt Shoots 78 and 79 Rounds

Feminine Star Plays at Columbia and Kenwood Links.

MAUREEN ORCUTT, smooth-swinging Englewood, N. J., feminine star, who doesn't like to talk much with newspapermen around because she once was unauthoritatively quoted as saying she wouldn't accept strokes from anyone except Bobby Jones (and another woman golfer started this false report, according to Miss Orcutt), delighted local galleries yesterday by shooting a 78 at Columbia Country Club in a morning round, and a 79 in the afternoon at Kenwood.

Swinging her sticks in approved American fashion, and crashing into the ball like a man, Miss Orcutt shot a 40-38 at Columbia, with sixes on the tenth and twelfth holes, spoiling an otherwise beautifully played nine. She stroked the last six holes in even par, a three on the seventeenth being her only birdie (men's par) of the round.

Freddie McLeod, the veteran Scot, one of those in the touring party with Miss Orcutt, put together a brace of 37's for a 74. Mrs. J. Marvin Haynes, Columbia champion, her hostess, had an 87, and W. W. Henshaw, an 82. Mrs. C. R. Harbaugh also played.

Near Mrs. Haynes' Record.

Miss Orcutt's 78 was one stroke shy of equaling the record for women which Mrs. Haynes set in a competitive round last fall.

Shifting over to Kenwood, Miss Orcutt teamed with her Cleveland friend, Mrs. C. R. Harbaugh, and Maury Fitzgerald against Mrs. Haynes and Al Houghton, pro. The latter pair triumphed, 1 up.

Houghton had a 73, Fitzgerald an 80, Mrs. Haynes an 88 and Mrs. Harbaugh a 90.

This afternoon Miss Orcutt will play at Congressional. Tomorrow afternoon she tours Chevy Chase.

95,000 Watch Celtic Victory in Scotland

Glasgow, Scotland, April 15 (A.P.). Celtic today defeated Motherwell, 1-0, in the final of the Scottish Soccer Cup competition before a crowd of 95,000, who braved a drizzle to see the play on a rain-soaked field.

It was the fourteenth win for the great Celtic team in the classic of Scottish soccer and their 22d appearance in the cup finals. Motherwell was playing in only its second cup final, its only previous appearance being in 1931 when it also lost to Celtic.

McGory, Celtic forward, scored the winning goal on a rebound off a Motherwell defense man as another Motherwell player attempted to clear the ball after a Celtic attack.

The game was sharply played despite the uncertain footing with first one team and then the other threatening to score. Motherwell attacked unceasingly after the Celtic goal, which came midway of the last half, but could not penetrate the strong Celtic defense.

DOWN the FAIRWAY
by DAVE HERMAN

A LITTLE less than four months from today the most important amateur championship in the country will be fought over a course that may witness the projecting into the spotlight of new heroes, the return to power of the Old Guard, or perhaps a successful invasion of American soil by foreign contestants.

Four months! A long time to look forward to the National Amateur. Yet, as the days pass on, this championship becomes a paramount topic for discussion among the Simon-pures of the Nation, particularly with the youngsters who have dreamed dreams of sky-rocketing to fame and having their names linked with such sturdy golf craftsmen as Walter Travis, H. Chandler Egan, Jerry Travers, Robert Gardner, Francis Ouimet, Chick Evans, George Von Elm and the peerless Robert Tyre Jones.

The retirement from the competitive field in 1930 of the one and only "grand slam" king, Bobby Jones, has paved the way for a wide-open battle for laurels, be it the National Open or Amateur. No longer do the golf experts scan the list of entrants, place their finger on the name of one man, and in their one-time characteristic fashion declare, "It's Jones against the field."

America Looks for New Jones.

Bobby Jones is out of the championship picture, and golfdom is looking to the day when another American of such courage and skill will take the place of the man who won five National Amateur, four National Open, one British Amateur and three British Open championships.

In the early nineties it was the premier shotsman, Travis, who was the man of the hour, with his three National Amateur crowns. Jerry Travers commanded prominence in 1907 with his victory in the National Amateur, and his attempt to win the title for the fifth time was repulsed by the phlegmatic young Boston expert, Francis Ouimet, in 1914, at Manchester, Vt.

The same Ouimet, after trying desperately for 17 years, crashed through with his second championship in the 1931 National Amateur at Beverly Country Club, Chicago. It was a long wait, but he was rewarded for his patient efforts and today Ouimet is one of our foremost golfers.

Whenever I mention the name of Ouimet I think of one of the greatest sports in golf and a man whose adroitness in handling his woods and irons is exceeded only by his putting genius.

Ouimet Denies He Was Hindered.

I remember standing near Ouimet on the second tee of the first day of the National Amateur at Five Farms. He was playing with Tony Torrence, the giant British star. It was Ouimet's honor. He was crashing into the ball just as Torrence was taking a couple of practice strokes close by, and there is no doubt about the fact that the Englishman's swinging—and he didn't mean to do it—caused Ouimet to hook his tee shot out of bounds. The Boston expert took a seven on the hole, and later remarked that the incident did not divert him, claiming it was "sloppy" work on his (Ouimet's) part. But Ouimet finished with a 78 for the round and barely qualified the following day.

Everyone has heard the story of Ouimet's sensational 30 for a new all-time amateur mark to blast the hopes of George Voigt, late of Washington, in the opening match of the 1932 championship, but few will recall how the Boston veteran had to call on his faithful putting blade to fight off the sensational challenge of a young collegian, Sidney Noyes, in the second round, when he rammed in a 25-footer for a birdie on the eighteenth hole to win 1 up—a putt that the oldtimers say was quite reminiscent of the stroke from a similar distance in 1913 on the seventeenth hole that was a contributing factor in enabling him to tie Ted Ray and Harry Vardon for National Open honors which Ouimet later won in the playoff.

Youth Presses Ouimet.

Youth pressed Ouimet to the limit in the quarter finals the next day, and that terrorizing young man from Cincinnati, Johnny Fischer, carried the veteran to the thirty-sixth hole before Ouimet smacked in a difficult twelve-footer to triumph, 1 up.

Again it was his putter, but this weapon, which held him in good stead during his three matches, was unable to stop the onslaught of Johnny Goodman, the Omaha, Nebr., giant killer in the semifinals.

In just a few weeks, when tournaments of various types, including the sectional test for the National Open on May 15, will be waged throughout the country, the golf experts will cut loose with their publicizing of new stars and sensations.

There are no Walker Cup matches this year, and if there were the U. S. G. A. could hardly overlook Johnny Goodman for a second or third choice in the list. Conqueror of Bobby Jones one year at Pebble Beach, Goodman has always been a front rank contender. Surely it couldn't have been Goodman's unexpected jolting at the hands of Billy Howell in the first round of the 1931 National Amateur that caused officials to leave the Nebraskan's name off last year's 1932 Walker Cup lineup.

Goodman, fired with new ambitions, caused some U. S. G. A. officials who were at the scene of last year's amateur classic to wonder why he was overlooked. Not only had he placed second to Fischer in the qualifying round, but had eliminated three members of the Walker Cup team, including the captain himself, before losing to Ross Somerville, of Canada, in the finals.

Goodman Does Well In Tourneys.

The 23-year-old Goodman has been doing well in winter tournaments. George Dunlap, Garden City, N. Y., who blazed such a conquering pace at Pinehurst recently, and who packs magic in his putter, as attested by his astoundingly low scores, will be one of the chief threats in the National Amateur at the Kenwood Country Club, Cincinnati, September 11-16.

Gus Moreland, the Texas hurricane of the links, and sensation in 1932 tournaments, already has served notice that he is at the top of his game by winning a couple of championships down in the Lone Star State. Moreland, with as perfect an iron game as you have ever seen, is one of the best young prospects of the day.

From the Pacific Coast will come the challenge of Charlie Seaver, a broad-shouldered athlete who whips out a tee shot for terrific distances, and Don Moe, both members of the 1932 Walker Cup team, and Lawson Little. Moe, like Dunlap, failed to strike his stride in the medal round of the last amateur and did not qualify for match play.

Yates Liked by Keeler.

One of the most promising young troupers of Southern fairways and one who, O. B. Keeler told me last year, is going to take Bobby Jones' place, is a gangling youth by the name of Charlie Yates, hailing from Atlanta. Yates got by McRuvie, of England, last year after finishing 7 strokes back of the leader in the qualifying round, but lost to Maurice McCarthy, former Georgetown star.

Dixie also will present a threat in Gene Vinson, of Meridian, Miss., a long hitter off the tee. Down in Birmingham, Ala., Sam Perry is being counted on to bring back the Southern prestige which Jones established, and Richmond, Va., with its Billy Howell, is hoping that the former Washington and Lee golf captain will go far in the game now that he has come under the wing of that brilliant golf instructor, "Wee Bobby" Cruickshank. Howell's greatest bid for fame was in 1931, when he lost to Ouimet in the semifinals of the amateur, 2 and 1. His showing last year was extremely disappointing.

Living in Cincinnati, Johnny Fischer, national intercollegiate champion from the University of Michigan and amateur medalist last year, is offered a grand opportunity to slip in enough practice to know the Kenwood course almost as well as the designer, the famous William H. Diddle. Johnny came marching home to equal Jones' qualifying record of 142, and the type of game he plays is fine enough to discourage the hopes of the best amateur in the world. Fischer's driving was easily the class of the last amateur classic, some of his tee shots going as far as 300 yards.

Veterans Still Command Attention.

Veterans should never be counted out of the running for honors. Remember Ouimet waited 17 years; Harold Hilton, the British star, had to battle for 13 years before capturing his third British amateur. And so down through the history of golf we find others trying for years and years, and finally succeeding.

Chick Evans was not discouraged by his defeat at the hands of Travers for the amateur title in 1912. Four years later Evans became champion, and in 1920 he reached the top again. Losing to Jess Sweetser in 1922 in the finals, the impeccable Chicago shotman has been a constant threat in every important national tournament.

The veterans did beautifully last year. Jesse Guilford, the Boston "siege gun," went to the semifinals before he ran into a tartar in Somerville; H. Chandler Egan, of California, who 28 years ago took the amateur title and repeated the following season, qualified, but was put out by Goodman.

Right down in our own section we have a number of excellent golfers who may do big things this year.

Roger Peacock, District champion and Duke University captain; Billy Dettweiler, 15, youngest entry in the last amateur; Maurice Nee, runner-up for national scholastic honors in 1932; Johnny Brawner, Washington's only qualifier last year; Miller B. Stevinson, the Columbia "war horse;" Maj. R. B. Sutherland, Army and Navy champion; Page Hufty, former North and South champion. Peacock, Nee and Dettweiler are improving at such a surprising pace that if they get by the sectional qualifying rounds at Columbia in August they may hustle out to Cincinnati in September and make a good showing. It was Peacock who finished only two strokes out of the qualifying circle at Five Farms, and two back of him was Nee.

Maj. Sutherland Has Game.

Maj. Sutherland, Army champion, has competed in national amateurs before, and in the opinion of J. Monro Hunter, the club pro, has the game to hold up with fast company.

To those from Washington who entertain high hopes of making the sectional grade here, may we remind you that the Kenwood course, where the championship will take place, has been declared by experts as one of the toughest in the country? I have just completed a study of the 18 holes, thanks to a description sent me from Cincinnati, and I believe it is a much stiffer layout than Five Farms.

Altered to meet the requirements of the U. S. G. A., the Kenwood course is 6,730 yards long, has a 36—35—71 par, and 128 traps strung along the fairways in such a way as to demand accurate shots on every hole. A wooded course, distance and perfect shots are required. One hole, the 594-yard sixth, has 17 traps, and another, almost the same distance, has 16.

A. A. U. Handball Title Annexed by J. B. Payne

J. B. Payne won the District A. A. U. handball championship yesterday, defeating Joe Cowley, also of the "Y," by scores of 20—21, 21—20, and 21—16 after an exhaustive struggle.

Jack Kosowsky and Jack Schwartz of the Jewish Community Center captured the doubles championship by virtue of their comparatively easy victory over Payne and Cowley. The scores were 21—12 and 21—4.

George Newman, of the "Y," was third in the singles, defeating Kosowsky for that honor, and Perry McLean and his partner, Sam Goldberg, finished third in the doubles, winning over Tom Scharsbee and Bill Myers.

The winners and runners-up will receive medals from the A. A. U. in recognition of their achievements.

HAZEN'S CANDIDACY HURT BY DISCOVERY OF VIRGINIA STATUS

By J. BERNARD McDONNELL.

A little of the hair of the dog which bit them might be a good prescription for the jitters with which candidates for District jobs are suffering as another week ended yesterday and President Roosevelt and his chief patronage dispenser, Postmaster General "Big Jim" Farley, failed to name their men.

Selections of District Commissioners are expected to be made this week although there is a report that the President isn't going to bother about local appointments for some time. He seems to feel that if the jobs now occupied by persons whose terms have expired were good enough in the beginning they still are good enough for the various individuals to hold onto them until he can find time to consider District matters in the welter of national problems.

Chances of appointment of Melvin Hazen, District surveyor, who has strong backing and is widely popular, were dimmed yesterday when it was discovered that Mr. Hazen has maintained his voting residence in Prince William County, Va. Official records show that Mr. Hazen has paid his voting tax for 1929, 1930 and 1931 as a resident of Prince William County, and that his capitation and other taxes, as well as those of Mary Hazen, are assessed there.

Claims Washington Home.

Although Mr. Hazen's opponents seized upon the official record showing he was a legal, voting resident of Virginia, Mr. Hazen's friends countered with the argument that, despite whatever taxes he may have paid, he had not voted in Virginia for six years and claimed Washington as his home. Technically, supporters of other candidates seemed to have Mr. Hazen dead to rights, and he is eliminated from the race unless the President chooses to disregard the law which prescribes that a civilian District Commissioner shall have been a bona fide resident of the District for at least three years prior to his appointment.

Rear Admiral Cary T. Grayson, retired, who was President Wilson's physician, threw about four conniption fits when the Hazen voting record was brought up by advocates of other men. Admiral Grayson has been assiduous in trying to have Hazen named. If Mr. Hazen is named, incidentally, it will be a direct slap in the face of the local Democratic organization. Mr. Hazen has behind him, however, not only Admiral Grayson, who was chairman of the inaugural committee, but Wilton J. Lambert, whose fame is Nation-wide despite his quiet talking and unpretentious manner, as well as others, including New York and New Jersey racehorse owners and a powerful social lobby who are thrilled at the idea of having one of their own set sitting in power in the District Building.

Korman Gains Support.

Aside from the dark horses, among whom are to be found one or two of serious potentialities, the names of Malcolm S. McConihe, contractor, who is very inadequately described by that designation; Ernest G. Walker, former newspaperman and real estate man; John A Korman, former prohibition agent, who has been engaged in the oil business for the last several years, and William McK. Clayton, veteran of many a battle for the people in the gatherings of the Federation of Citizens' Associations.

Mr. Korman has been very active in lining up support for his candidacy. He is said to have received the indorsement of more than 100 members of the House and a good proportion of the members of the Senate. Undoubtedly Hitler's anti-Jewish campaign has helped Mr. Korman's campaign. There is, however, another of his faith who has a much more distinguished public record who is numbered among the dark horses. Although not an active candidate the man in question would take from Korman much of his strength. He has refused to permit his friends the use of his name, although he would take the job of District Commissioner if it were tendered to him. He would be acceptable to the District Democratic organization.

The women are putting up a fight to have one of their sex named Commissioner. Friends of Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, District Democratic national committeewoman, advanced her name energetically, but Mrs. Harriman's anti-Roosevelt activities are thought to have been sufficient to kill off that boom.

Mrs. Bannister's Bid.

Another woman's name which has been seriously advanced is that of Mrs. Blair Bannister, sister of Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia. But Mrs. Bannister is confronted with the united opposition of organization Democrats. They point out that she threw the party overboard in 1928 when Al Smith was the candidate and closed up her professedly Democratic magazine and took the stump for Hoover. She is counting now not on what she and others in her family did, but on what was done by the little ton of Virginia dynamite, Carter Glass, in that campaign to demonstrate that she is a true blue Democrat. It is an odds-on bet that no woman will be named, despite the desperate campaign which is being waged by various women whose incomes have been reduced and who would like to have the Government contribute $9,000 a year to their exchequer.

How long whoever is appointed will hold their jobs is a matter of conjecture. The President has been persuaded, apparently, that the municipal governmental machinery can be improved. He contemplates proposing a reorganization of the city government. He is not going to propose reorganization at this time because it is not the right time to propose it. But he probably will have a reorganization proposal ready to submit to the first regular session of Congress when it convenes in December.

In the meantime there will be various members of Congress to be consulted. One of the most powerful persons on Capitol Hill will be Representative Mary T. Norton, of New Jersey, chairman of the District Committee of the House. Mrs. Norton undoubtedly will be called to the White House by the President before any nominations are sent to the Senate and undoubtedly she will be consulted before any revision of the District governmental machinery is undertaken.

DEBRIS CAUSES CREEK TO DIVERT ITS COURSE

Views of Rock Creek in Maryland which show some of the obstructions which are causing the stream to erode its banks and pile up debris which will be swept down on expensively cleared Washington Rock Creek by spring freshets. Both views show fallen trees and in the bottom picture, the creek has been diverted to the wrong side of the tree by debris piling up against stumps.

30 MILES OF TREES ARE BEING PLANTED

Replacements Occupy Most of Time of District Park Workers.

Thirty miles of trees, all nurtured in the District nurseries, are being planted in various sections of Washington this spring under the direction of Clifford Lanham, superintendent of trees and parkings. These 3,000 trees are largely replacements, as plantings on new streets have been completed for the most part.

These trees are of the following varieties: Oriental plain or sycamore, Norway maple, pin oak, red oak, willow leaf oak, Gingko or maiden hair of Japan, red maple, Siberian elm, American ash, and sweet gum.

The planting of trees on new streets will be practically eliminated during the fiscal year 1934 if the greatly reduced estimate for this division, as recommended by the Budget Bureau, is adopted by Congress. From an original figure of $122,500, which was recommended to the Seventy-second Congress, the division's estimate has been cut to $84,000.

As a result one foreman will be dropped and all employes will be required to take nine and a half days furlough in addition to the additional general pay cut.

Commenting on the causes of the hundreds of tree deaths during a year, Mr. Lanham said that escaping gas, automobile oil and automobile crashes contributed considerably to the fatalities although street improvements and changes brought about the greatest replacements. The high gas pressure demanded of the Washington Gas Light Co. by the Public Utilities Commission has resulted in more underground leaks and consequently more tree deaths, Mr. Lanham said. Although the gas company has been prompt to repair such leaks when discovered, the gas kills quickly, even overnight, and the soil is not fit for further tree planting for several years.

The advent of electric refrigeration, he said, has almost eliminated one deadly enemy of trees of a decade or so ago. It used to be that no trees could live in front of drug stores and ice cream dispensaries because the salt water from ice cream freezers killed them.

There are now 113,000 trees under the supervision of the superintendent of trees and parkings and they are gradually being increased despite the fact that more than 3,000 are removed yearly.

Fritz Dying

Dog Felled by Sniper Was Poisoned 2 Weeks Ago, Inquiry Reveals.

"Fritz," canine friend and pet of 2-year-old Teddy Cash, of 4530 Ninth street northwest, who was shot by an unidentified sniper Friday afternoon in front of his master's home, was sinking rapidly last night according to reports from the Cash residence.

Dr. Mason Weadon, veterinarian, who was called in yesterday, held little hope for the dog's recovery. Late yesterday "Fritz" showed signs of improvement, but several hours later his condition became steadily worse. Theodore R. Cash, Teddy's father, late last night was administering medicine to the dog and applying packs to its fever-heated body.

Meanwhile, Sergt. A. M. Winfree, of the Tenth Police Precinct, who has been assigned to the case, was investigating the mysterious shot which came so close to striking young Teddy while he was riding his tricycle, with the dog close behind.

Investigation revealed that about two weeks ago an attempt was made to kill the dog by poisoning. The dog became ill and Friday was its first day out of doors.

If pneumonia or blood poisoning does not set in, the dog may have a chance, but a very slim one, Dr. Weadon said yesterday.

Russell Discounts Democratic Split

Club President Says Loss of Dissenting Group Has Little Effect.

Victor Russell, president of the Young Democrats Club of Washington, said yesterday that withdrawal of a small group from the organization will not interfere with the normal course of the club's activities. He said it will hold its regular meeting April 21.

"While the dissenting group is going ahead in an effort to organize a rival club, the defection seems to have little or no effect on the established club," Mr. Russell said.

The schism over the failure of the club to adopt a constitution, Mr. Russell labeled a "tempest in a teapot." The withdrawing group is led by Homer Tatum and Miss Lyda M. Francis.

BUSINESS COLLEGES URGED TO SET PACE

Schools Told to Shake Off Old Methods as Annual Convention Closes.

A call to arms to commercial schools and colleges throughout the country to shake off the shackles of tradition and prepare students for changing economic conditions was sounded at the concluding session yesterday of the thirty-fifth annual convention of the Eastern Commercial Teachers Association at Wardman Park Hotel.

A great deal of the distress incurred during the depression could have been avoided if teachers of business had been more aggressive in adopting new methods, it was charged. Business schools were criticised for not keeping pace with the office equipment being introduced in the world of business. The District Board of Education was congratulated for arranging an exhibit of the model business school and ideally equipped classroom at Roosevelt High School.

Walsh Warns Wealthy.

Speaking on "Capitalism at the Crossroads" at the morning session, the Rev. Dr. Edmund A. Walsh, regent of the School of Foreign Service at Georgetown University, declared that it is up to the few who control the country's wealth to take the leadership in introducing an economic system that will be fairer and result in more equable distribution of wealth. If this is not done, he warned, the leadership will come from an unexpected quarter.

A warning against domination of business by Federal and State government was sounded at a banquet last night by Dr. Harold Stonier, director of education of the American Bankers Association. A compromise with socialism is going to result in a different type of government and economic order, Dr. Stonier asserted. He appealed to the teaching profession to fit itself for the new trends.

Poems of Riley Read.

The following new officers were elected: John F. Robinson, of Burdette College, Boston, Mass., president; Mrs. Samuel N. North, wife of the supervisor of State high schools in Maryland, vice president; Harry I. Good, director of business education, of Buffalo, secretary (reelected); Arnold M. Lloyd, principal of Banks College, Philadelphia, Pa., treasurer (reelected), and Miss Catherine Nulty, of the University of Vermont, Burlington, Vt., editor of the year book. Nathaniel Alhaus, director of business education of New York City, and P. J. Harmon, of Strayer's Business College, were elected members of the executive board.

One Freed, One Guilty In Slaying of Man

After deliberating more than six hours, a jury in the court of Justice Daniel W. O'Donoghue yesterday returned a verdict acquitting William S. Johnson, colored, of first-degree murder, and finding his codefendant, Wilbur Briscoe, also colored, guilty of manslaughter.

The pair was indicted for the slaying of Jesse Woods, also colored, last January in a house at 1234 Sixth street northwest. They pleaded self-defense.

FOREST ARMY AID IS URGED IN UPPER ROCK CREEK PARK

Maryland Engineer Claims Plan Would Save D. C. From Freshet Waste.

Thousands of dollars expended by the Federal Government in beautifying and clearing Rock Creek in the District probably will be wasted unless some method of clearing the Maryland section is evolved before the spring freshets.

Chief Engineer Irving C. Root, of the Maryland National Capital Park and Planning Commission, which has charge of the Maryland portion of Rock Creek Park, has written to Robert Fechner, director of emergency conservation work of the Department of the Interior, to ask that 100 members of President Roosevelt's Reforestation Corps be assigned to aid in park forestry work.

Under the Capper-Cramton act, plans have been adopted for the extension of the Washington Park system into Maryland at an estimated cost of $4,500,000. The purchase of this park land is being financed by an advance of Federal funds of which one-third is a gift. About 400 acres of park land have been purchased in the Anacostia, Sligo and Rock Creek Valleys and these park areas are being extended as rapidly as purchases can be made at a fair price.

Maryland Holds Title.

The title to park lands purchased in this manner is held by Maryland, although the Federal Government, through the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, approved plans for the areas purchased and all development work. In the past two years the Maryland commission has expended $100,000 for development of these parks.

Two hundred acres of timber land require improvement, and 9 miles of creek bed should be cleared of stumps and other obstructions which increase flood damage and debris which washes into the District, causing expensive clearing operations in the District parks.

In addition to his plea to Federal authorities, Mr. Root will confer with heads of the Washington Community Chest to ask that some of the men who are aided by the Chest be assigned to the Maryland park work. He points out that thousands of dollars annually are contributed to the Chest by residents of Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties.

More Money Needed.

The park and planning commission is doing everything in its power to clear the creek but it would take much more than $10,000 to do the job properly, he holds, and this is beyond the present ability of the commission.

The Social Service League of Montgomery County is doing all it can to aid, Mr. Root said, but it, too, is handicapped by lack of funds. The planning commission is using men recommended by the Social Service League in the small amount of clearing possible.

The planning commission has enough tools and other equipment for the job, but its crying need is man power, Mr. Root said. Nationally recognized as a parking and planning expert, the development of Rock Creek Park in Maryland has become one of his chief hobbies.

Mr. Root has prepared a three-part program which would require the services of 100 men for six months and which is workable equally with reforestation corps or emergency relief workers.

Work Program Outlined.

The first part is reforestation, fire prevention and insect control, which will require four items: Clearing, thinning and grubbing 200 acres of timber land, $500 and 15 men; boundary survey and sign posting, $200 and 5 men; tree planting and nursery, $100 and 10 men; shelter building construction, $200 and 10 men.

The second includes swamp land reclamation, with an outlay of $7,500 and the work of 30 men being utilized in subsoil tile drainage of 165 acres, using 800 feet of tile per acre.

The third embraces flood control and soil erosion prevention as follows: Removal of logs, snags and other obstructions from stream beds (9 miles), $500 and 20 men and construction of baffles, riprap and fords, $500 and 10 men. Thus at a cost of $9,500 a job could be completed which would run into far higher figures if the labor must be paid for by the planning commission.

Social Agencies Council To Hear Labor Leader

Edward F. McGrady, legislative representative of the American Federation of Labor, will speak on the Federal relief program at the eleventh annual meeting of the Council of Social Agencies Tuesday at 12:30 p. m. at the Y. W. C. A. Building.

During the business meeting an election of members to the board of directors will be held and the nominating committee will present names for reelection of members for three and one year periods. Dr. Frederic W. Perkins, president of the council, will preside.

Study of Triangle Landscape Slated

Fine Arts Body Also Will Take Up Approach to Cemetery.

Plans for the architectural-landscape development of the great court of the triangle south of Pennsylvania avenue, opposite the new Department of Commerce Building, will be studied by the Commission of Fine Arts at its meeting next Friday.

The commission will also give attention to plans for the approach to Arlington National Cemetery, a part of the Arlington Memorial Bridge development; the American Pharmaceutical Association Building, under construction immediately north of the Lincoln Memorial, and several projects provided for by the Shipstead-Luce act.

In connection with the triangle court, the commission is giving detailed advice in construction of adjacent buildings, the Department of Labor, the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Postoffice Department.

PLAYGROUND CHIEF HONORED

SEATLESS COUNTERS MAY SERVE 3.2 BEER

Rover Indicates Room Lack Will Modify Rule of Licensing Board.

That much-debated question as to whether or not beer can be sold over a "good counter" that is not equipped with seats, remained unsettled yesterday when United States Attorney Leo A. Rover, upon whom will fall the burden of prosecuting violations of the beer law, declared his office had not been asked for an opinion on the matter.

He intimated that beer could be sold over the counter even if there were no seating arrangements at the counter. The problem of granting licenses, or permitting places unequipped with seating arrangements to continue dispensing, is puzzling the license board, but with Mr. Rover's intimation that such places could dispense the amber fluid without having seats at the "bar" the question may be resolved in favor of the dispensaries that have not the space or the money to furnish the seats.

It was pointed out that several of the downtown favorites have no room for the placing of seats at the bar. If the original rule was strictly adhered to these places would be severely handicapped.

Ambulance Driver Fined $50 in Crash

Hospital Employe Convicted in Collision With Turnage's Auto.

William McCeney, driver of a Casualty Hospital ambulance which collided with an automobile Friday night, was fined $50, or 45 days in jail, yesterday in Traffic Court by Judge John P. McMahon. He was charged with disobeying a traffic signal.

The ambulance figured in a collision at Thirteenth street and New York avenue, with a car driven by United States Commissioner Needham C. Turnage. No one was injured, but the cars were damaged considerably. McCeney was alleged to have driven through a red light.

THOMPSON NAMES BANK NEGOTIATORS

Park Savings Program to Be Laid Before Comptroller at Early Date.

Judge J. W. Thompson, who was elected at a mass meeting of the Park Savings Bank depositors last week to head a committee to interview the Comptroller of the Currency, announced last night the names of his colleagues.

Judge Thompson stated that another mass meeting of the depositors will be held shortly after his interview with the Comptroller, which will probably be tomorrow. This meeting will be held in the auditorium at Central High School. All depositors are urged to attend as it will be necessary for at least three-fourths of the depositors to sanction the plan.

It was brought out at the meeting last Thursday night that there will be more than $978,000 left after all indebtedness of the bank is paid. This consists of $323,000 in loans to the bank, $81,000 in bonds, $124,000 in United States securities, $150,000 in cashier's bond, $50,000 insurance on the late Robert Stuntz, $100,000 in capital stock and the building and equipment valued at more than $150,000.

National Boys' Week Sponsors Meet Tuesday

Representatives of the thirteen organizations participating in the citywide celebration of national boys' week here April 29-May 6, will meet at room 217, Investment Building, Tuesday morning to discuss their part in carrying out the tentative program outlined by the Board of Trade committee headed by S. Percy Thompson at its recent meeting.

Every minister of every denomination in the city will be asked to speak on boys and their problems, either in the sermon or in a special announcement on Sunday, April 30. In this connection the thirteen organizations will sponsor a go-to-church movement on the part of the boys, not only in their own organizations but in the entire neighborhoods in which these organizations are located.

GEORGETOWN TOUR OF HISTORIC HOMES SET FOR THIS WEEK

Three Famous Houses Will Be Visited on Friday and Saturday.

Three historic houses in Georgetown will be opened to the public, and many other famous homes of that oldest section of the National Capital, where prominent Government officials and literary and journalistic figures now reside, will be pointed out during the fourth annual tour of the eighteenth century Georgetown to be held on Friday and Saturday.

The tour, under the auspices of St. John's Church, Georgetown, will take place in the afternoon of each day and will be made in motor buses which will leave from Twenty-eighth and M streets northwest at 1 o'clock and at half-hour intervals after that. Georgetown residents, acting as guides, will accompany each bus.

The first house which will be visited will be the present residence of Lieut. Col. W. A. McCain at 3337 N street. This home is one of a row of five houses built about 1790 by John Cox, who was Mayor of Georgetown for 26 years. Cox entertained in this house in 1824 Gen. Lafayette, at a dinner and reception, especially opening and furnishing his home for the occasion as his wife was ill in another residence, the Cedars, where Western High School now stands.

Old Riley Residence.

The tour's second stop will be the Riley house at 3038 N street, built about 1800 by Romulus Riggs, of Philadelphia when the Government was moved from that city to Washington. Shortly after its construction it was bought by Dr. Joshua Riley, a Georgetown physician for 75 years. In 1915 it was bought by Mrs. Johnson, the granddaughter of President Lincoln. It is now the residence of Maj. Henry Leonard.

The residence of Mr. and Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins at 1524 Twenty-eighth street will be the third house visited. This home, known as the Robert Perley Dodge house, was begun in 1850 and completed in 1853. Robert Dodge was consulting engineer for the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Co. and was also affiliated with the shipping firm of his father, Francis Dodge, which played a prominent part in the activities of Georgetown Harbor, then one of the leading American seaports.

Prominent Washingtonians.

Among the homes, many of them with a historical background, of prominent Washingtonians which will be passed during the tour will be the following residences: Lewis W. Douglas, Budget Director; Senator John H. Bankhead, of Alabama; Mrs. Robert T. Lincoln, widow of the President's eldest son; Interstate Commerce Commissioners Ernest I. Lewis, Charles D. Mahaffie and Balthasar H. Myer; Ambassador Robert Woods Bliss, Frank Simonds, international journalist; William Hard, newspaper correspondent and radio news commentator, and Thomas D. Thacher, Solicitor General of the United States.

The chairman of a large committee on arrangements, guides and hostesses is Mrs. Theodore N. Gill, jr., of 3022 P street northwest, from whom tickets may be obtained in advance at $1 each. Dumbarton House, national headquarters of the Colonial Dames of America, at 2715 Q street, will be open with special hostesses at an additional reasonable charge for those who wish to stop there during the tour.

Mrs. Alice Coyle Torbert presented an address on "Memories of Some Georgetown Houses" over Station WMAL last night.

Capper and Lesh Speak To Citizens Wednesday

Senator Arthur Capper, of Kansas, and Paul E. Lesh, Washington attorney, will speak at a meeting of the Petworth Citizens Association at the Barnard School, Fifth and Decatur streets northwest, Wednesday night. They will discuss national representation for the District.

The meeting will take place on Patriots Day, anniversary of the ride of Paul Revere. A motion picture, "Washington: The Man and the City," will be shown.

PRETTY FURNISHING IN BUCHANAN HOME

Exhibit Dwelling Is Located at Sixteenth and Juniper Streets.

The furnishing of the excellent dwelling being presented by the office of J. Wesley Buchanan, Inc., at Sixteenth and Juniper streets northwest, is beautiful and tasteful. This exhibit dwelling, built by E. T. Lindner, is furnished by Hutchison's, Inc., and the draperies are by John F. Ligon.

As you enter this home of a center-hall plan, you will find a spacious reception room which has a tilt-top Duncan Phyfe console table over which hangs an American Victory mirror. An occasional French cabinet, hand-carved in solid walnut, is in one corner. Domestic Oriental scatter rugs are on the floor.

To your left in the living room there is a beautiful antique gold mirror over the mantle. Here you will find a two-piece sofa and chair to match, upholstered in a plain mohair-freize in a shade of color that is very new and sometimes referred to as "ashes of roses." An occasional arm chair is in contrast in green linen frieze, on a solid mahogany hand-carved frame. The secretary-desk, in one corner of the room is a very handsome Sheraton mahogany with a marquetrie inlay with antique mountings on top.

In the opposite corner, there is located a tilt-top table of crotch mahogany, a truly colonial reproduction. You will also find coffee, occasional and end tables along side of the sofa and chairs. In front of the window is a Pembrooke drop-leaf table in a Chinese Chippendale base, matching the coffee table. The radio is of the latest Philco models with a remote control which is operated with the speaker in the corner of the room and the lazy-boy installed by the side of the arm of the sofa.

The rug is the new super-Gulistan, a reproduction of an Oriental Sarouk. The color and weave of this new domestic reproduction is worthy of special note and it is almost impossible to distinguish it from a genuine Persian rug. There is an assortment of lamps including an indirect reflector floor lamp, a beautiful candle-light table lamp and bridge lamp.

Cozy Den Off Living Room.

Directly off the living room is located a cozy den with a flat-top mahogany desk in one corner with a banjo-type clock hanging over it. A very fine wing chair in the opposite side of the room is upholstered in a figured damask with down cushions and is of solid mahogany. In another corner there is a solid walnut corner whatnot. Along side of this is an occasional armchair of a Chinese Chippendale period, upholstered in an antique cut velour. The lamps in this room are very unusual. The bridge lamp is an oil burner type-glass chimney and the parchment shade has a silhouette painted on it. The desk lamp is of the same type and matching the bridge lamp. The rug is a domestic Oriental of the same weave matching the other rug.

Off to the right of the reception room you enter a very bright dining room furnished with a very beautiful mahogany suite, consisting of a double Duncan Phyfe table, a set of Chinese Chippendale chairs upholstered in blue haircloth seats, a Sheraton buffet with corner-rounding ends and a tilt-top serving table. The rug is a domestic Oriental of a Persian design with just enough blue predominating to look well with the blue haircloth on the chairs.

As you go up the main stairway on a soft broadloom carpet in a deep shade of rust, you will find at the landing a small console table with a mirror hanging over it. On the floor are scatter rugs.

Surprise of Home.

Down at the end of the hall is located the surprise of the home. A library paneled with beam ceiling; something in a new process of burnt wood with furnishings of early American reproductions. As you enter this room the first thing you will find is a maple Governor Winthrop desk with an old Cape Cod split-bottom, ladder-back chair in maple. An old oil burning copper lamp sits on the desk. There is also a two-piece love settee and a chair with an ottoman to match, upholstered in a glazed chintz material.

Underneath one of the windows there is located a flat-top maple table, also two maple, butterfly-end tables are along side of the settee and chair. There is a genuine red leather armchair and a Lloyd tubelar rocker, which is something new and modern. The lamps in this library are very handsome maple pedestals, one is the junior three-lights candle lamp; another a maple bridge lamp and one twin floor lamp with oil-pot burners and chimneys with parchment shades on which are painted silhouettes of George and Mary Washington in black and silver. This room also contains a small radio.

The master bedroom contains a twin bed suite in walnut, consisting of a vanity dressing table, a dresser and chiffonier. You will find a very lovely boudoir chair upholstered in glazed chintz of a flowered pattern on a background of natural tan. On the floor are handmade hook rugs of rare design and colors. There is a bridge lamp beside the boudoir chair, two candlestick lamps with gold taffeta silk shades on the dressing table and a hobnail lamp on the bedside table between the twin beds. The room is carried out in a color scheme of a soft shade of rose.

Four-Poster Style.

Across the hall from the master bedroom is located the guest room with twin beds of four-poster style in walnut. In one corner there is a vanity dressing table and bench; on the opposite side of the room, a dresser to match. This suite is of walnut with a veneered burl butt walnut over a bowed front. The boudoir chair is upholstered in blue damask. The rugs are handmade hooked of beautiful colors and designs. Two hobnail lamps are on the dressing table and one on the bedside table between the twin beds All of them have very pretty shades.

The third bedroom is furnished in mahogany with a double bed in the center of the room, a dresser on one side and a chest of drawers in the far corner. The vanity dressing table is in an alcove—especially built into this room which makes an ideal setting. The boudoir chair has loose back pillows upholstered in an orchid moire fabric. The rugs are handmade hooked. Two lamps on the dressing table in the alcove are orchid candle sticks with another little orchid lamp on the bedside table. The color scheme of this room is orchid.

The fourth bedroom is furnished in early American maple with a double four-poster bed and dresser in curley maple, with a Cape Cod wingchair of maple upholstered in glazed chintz. A small maple whatnot fits in one corner of the room and there is a maple bedside table with a small maple chair. The rugs in this room are oval and of chenille-mottled colors with green predominating. The two lamps have pewter bases and parchment shades. The room is carried out in a soft shade of green.

In addition to these bedrooms, in the basement the servant bedroom is furnished with a three-piece suite in maple.

Draperies are Attractive.

The draperies in the home were installed by John F. Ligon, 3417 Connecticut avenue. The living room is particularly attractive, as a most unusual drapery material, gold in color, was used. The material is a very heavy interwoven fabric, designed with Oriental urns of decorative flowers. In the dining room a very attractive satin damask, brocaded with silk flowers in rust and gold, is used. All glass curtains on the first floor are made from figured kapok, furnished by the Abbott Co., of New York City.

Kirsch Manufacturing Co. has furnished all of the drapery hardware, using decorative hold-backs on the first floor.

The bedrooms are most attractively draped. The glass curtains are made of cotton net, very loosely woven. In the north bedroom the color scheme is carried out in rose. The

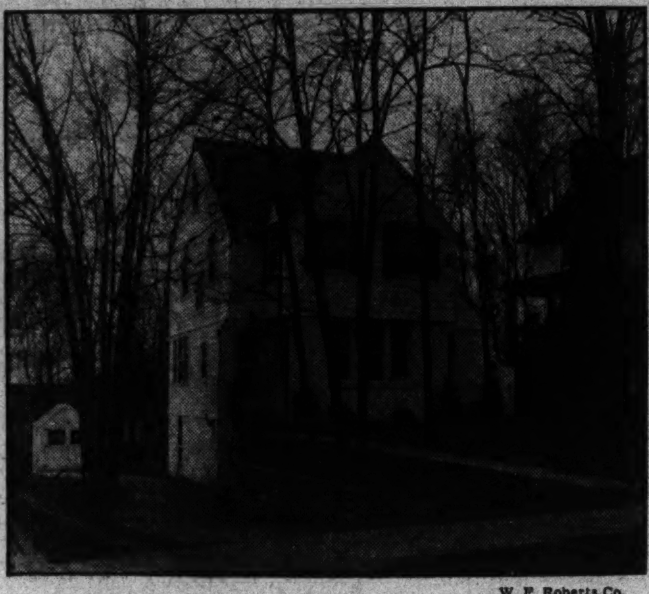
CHARMING WESLEY HEIGHTS HOME



W. F. Roberts Co.

New England colonial home recently completed in Wesley Heights for Thomas F. Burke at 4426 Lowell street northwest. This home contains six rooms, two baths and has a one-car garage. It was designed, built and sold by W. C. & A. N. Miller.

RESIDENCES BUILT BY GRUVER SELLING

"Gruver Built" homes are selling rapidly. Fourteen of the sixteen homes presented by B. H. Gruver in the 400 block of Ingraham street northwest have been sold since their completion. The popular group includes The Washington Post Model Home of 1933 at 412 Ingraham street, now open for public inspection daily and Sunday until 9 o'clock in the evening.

In the selection of the furnishings for the model home, Joseph B. McSherry, of 1724-26-28 H street northwest, was mindful of the fact that quality should predominate in this beautiful new home, "B. H. Gruver Built," the name which means quality.

The dining room is furnished with a most interesting group in mahogany—Duncan Phyfe table, Hepplewhite chairs, corner china cabinet, serpentine-front buffet and server. A gold-leaf mirror and hand-carved clock complete the room. The hangings are of marquisette, draped with gold damask.

The breakfast room is furnished in maple and the drapes are in a colorful cretonne, which give a cheery effect.

One of the outstanding features of this delightful home is the spacious recreation room, which is furnished with an oak refectory table, six leather-seat chairs to match and buffet-type cabinet, which is very useful.

The den, or study, is furnished with a studio sofa, which can be converted into a full-size or twin bed, whichever one may desire. The modernistic ends placed at each end of the couch, with its attractive lamps, make an attractive setting.

The master bedroom is furnished in honey maple. Poster bed, dresser, chest, vanity bench and night stand make this room, with its green and gold lamps, an attractive boudoir.

The guest room is furnished in colonial mahogany. A full-size bed, large dresser, chest and night stand with an attractive boudoir chair complete this useful room.

These houses are being presented for sale by the office of William M. Throckmorton in the Investment Building.

Architects Council Approves Designs.

The "approved" rating was awarded plans for a dwelling at 3709 Twenty-sixth street northeast by the Architects Advisory Council last week. Ethradge F. Rawl is the owner of the projected structure and Tolson, Kemp & Nix the builders and designers.

INTEREST CONTINUES IN NEW DEAL HOME

More Than 3,000 Persons Have Visited Residence Built by Gruver.

Great interest continues in the latest "Gruver-Built" homes. More than 3,000 persons have visited this new group of homes opened by B. H. Gruver in the 2400 block of Thirty-ninth street northwest. The offering is featured by a "new era" exhibit house at 2434 Thirty-ninth street northwest (Thirty-ninth and Calvert streets), which, like the others, has a 20-foot width and to which Mr. Gruver invites comparison with any ever offered to the Washington public at the price.

The homes contain eight rooms, two baths, recreation room and all the modern conveniences and necessities. They are all-brick homes, immaculate from cellar to roof, with a host of innovations and surprise features which await the inspection of prospective home seekers. They represent a "new deal" in value.

To reach the exhibit house, which will be open daily and Sunday until 9 p. m., drive out Massachusetts avenue to Wisconsin avenue, south to Calvert street, then west or right to Thirty-ninth street and 1½ squares south to the home.

The group is located in Glover Park Heights, adjacent to Massachusetts Avenue Heights, one of the highest elevations in the city. The homes are near a new school and but five minnutes' drive from Dupont Circle.

Features of these homes are their terraced yards with brick retaining walls, painted concrete porches, spacious recreation rooms with stippled walls, cedar closets, colored tile baths, copper screening and excellent weather-stripping. Their kitchens are said by officials of the Gruver organization to excel any ever introduced in homes at this price. The interiors are in natural trim throughout. There are storage hot-water heaters in the basements. The houses contain built-in garages and all front and abut paved streets and alleys.

These houses are being presented for sale by the office of William M. Throckmorton in the Investment Building.

BILLS IN CONGRESS ON REALTY STUDIED

Numerous Measures Have Been Introduced Affecting National Capital.

Numerous measures affecting the interests of real estate brokers, property owners, mortgage lending sources and investors in real estate in the District of Columbia which have been introduced in the Seventy-third Congress, are reviewed in a recent issue of The Washington Realtor, publication of the Washington Real Estate Board. Two of the measure having the indorsement of the Washington Real Estate Board are Senate 867—the real estate license bill and Senate 866—the release bill providing for the presentation of cancelled notes to the recorder of deeds.

For nearly 10 years the board has been endeavoring to secure the enactment into law of similar legislation for the licensing of real estate brokers. Twenty-seven States now have such legislation. The provisions of the proposed law are the some as those contained in Senate 2358, which passed the Senate March, 1932. A broker's fee of $15 is proposed and a bond of $2,500.

The release bill carries the same provisions as contained in Senate 4444, which passed the Senate during the Seventy-second Congress. Both measures were introduced in this Congress by Senator King, chairman of the Senate District Committee. A brief resume of some of the other measures pertaining to real estate follows:

By Senator Capper.

Senate 296, Senator Capper—provides for the discontinuance of the use as dwelling of buildings in alleys in the District and for the replatting and development of squares containing inhabited alleys, in the interest of public health, comfort, morals, safety and welfare. It grants Commissioners of the District the right to carry out a policy established by act of May 16, 1918, as amended: To purchase or acquire by condemnation or gift land or buildings within any square containing inhabited alleys: to replat any land acquired, pave, &c.; to lease, rent, maintain, exchange, sell, &c., any lands or buildings; to aid in providing, equipping, maintaining houses and other buildings by loans to limited dividend corporations, or to home owners under certain restrictions. It also provides for the appropriation of $500,000 from the funds of the United States Housing Corporation and a like amount to be appropriated from the Federal Treasury. It also grants the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the right to borrow many from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. All alley dwellings must be unoccupied by July, 1942.

Senate 561, Senator Copeland—Provides for the creation of a housing board and authorizing the incorporation of limited-dividend housing corporations in the District of Columbia. Grants housing board of five members authority to determine insanitary and unfit housing conditions; to prepare projects for correcting such conditions; distribute information relating to housing, vacancies, &c., and reconstruction of blighted areas with a view toward relieving unemployment. Provides that three or more persons may become a limited-dividend housing corporation to carry out projects authorized and approved by housing board, dividends limited to 6 per cent. Rents to be prescribed by housing board. Annual appropriation of $25,000.

By Senator King.

Senate 584, introduced by Senator King, "to extend the powers of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. Grants Commissioners authority to make municipal regulations and ordinances deemed necessary and to fix and collect fees for licenses and permits for trade, profession or vocation, inspections, &c., and to prescribe penalties.

Senate 585, introduced by Senator King—"Relating to the release of real estate mortgages and deeds of trust in the District of Columbia." Requires that all releases carry notation by recorder of deeds.

Senate 586, Senator King—"To regulate foreclosure of mortgages and deeds of trust in the District of Columbia." Provides that no real estate in the District shall be sold to satisfy mortgage or deed of trust except in pursuance of decree of the Supreme Court of the District entered in a foreclosure proceeding. No final decree of foreclosure shall be entered until after six months.

Senate 587, Senator King—"To amend section 1180 of the District Code with respect to usury." Defines usury and limits interest rate. This is the same bill introduced by Senator King during the Seventy-second Congress.

Senate 1100, Senator Capper—"To require the furnishing of heat in living quarters in the District of Columbia." Requires, every lessor to furnish heat when agreement is entered into, to maintain 68 degree heat between 7 a. m. and 10 p. m.

By Representative Hancock.

H. J. Res. 54, Representative Hancock, of North Carolina, provides for a two-year suspension period on certain debts. Affects payment of obligations secured by mortgage on real property.

H. R. 69, Representative McSwain—"To empower judges to grant a limited moratorium in foreclosure proceedings." Court may grant postponement of final judgment and decree for one year periods up to three years.

H. R. 1563, Representative Taylor, of Tennessee—"Providing for loans or advances by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the purpose of securing the postponement of the foreclosure of certain mortgages for a period of two years, and for other purposes." Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make 4 per cent loans to mortgagees for the purpose of securing the postponement for two years of the foreclosure of farm mortgages, and of mortgages on homes occupied by their owners, if mortgage acquired prior to January 1, 1931.

H. R. 1568, Representative McLeod—"To amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, as amended by the emergency relief act of 1932, by adding thereto a new section providing for direct loans to banks, trust companies, insurance companies and building and loan associations, for the specific purpose of preventing foreclosures on homes and farms."

H. R. 3080, Representative Truax—"To provide that no judicial order for sale of any real estate shall be issued by any court in the United States of America for a period of one year from the passage of this act." Would not permit receiver or trustee to dispossess any tenant for one year in addition to action set forth in title of proposed bill.

H. R. 3527, Representative Harlan—"To supervise and regulate the sale of securities within the District of Columbia." The so-called "blue sky" bill—practically the same as introduced in Seventy-second Congress by Representative Bowman, H. R., 9065. Favorably reported last session by House District Committee. Original measure carried support of leading banking, real estate and commercial groups of District.

in Pennsylvania, Maryland, Ohio, New Jersey, New York, Michigan and Illinois for a good many years. The Wise Shoe Co., Inc., is the outgrowth of three generations of shoe retailing.

Plans for extensive alterations to the premises at 1113 F street already have been drawn, and the new store to be opened is modernistically designed both in the interior and window display. It is patterned after the company's headquarters store at 384 Fifth avenue, New York City. When it is opened this store will be one of the best equipped in Washington.

J. L. Alheim, comptroller of the firm, upon closing the lease for this store last week, expressed optimism as to general business conditions. Sales statistics of this company reveal a general upturn is under way, and he feels sure that Washington is bound to benefit greatly by a general improvement in conditions throughout the country.

Negotiations for the lease to the Wise Shoe Co., Inc., were handled by Carl G. Rosinski, representing the tenant, and the Washington Loan & Trust Co., representing Mrs. Olivia D. Becker, the owner.

HOW TO CONSTRUCT PORCHES AND BLINDS

Screens Also Discussed in Book Telling How to Judge Parts of Buildings.

Porches, blinds and screens are the subjects of an interesting division in the book, "How to Judge a House," by Nelson S. Perkins, construction engineer, national committee on wood utilization, published by the United States Department of Commerce.

Mr. Perkins states, "The porch or other projections beyond the main body of the house, should rest on sound foundations; make sure they have not sunk. The porch should be supported by masonry piers or walls carried below the frost line. Wood used in contact with the ground or excessive moisture should be chemically treated or be of heartwood from one of the durable species such as cedar, cypress or redwood.

"The space under the porch is frequently inclosed by a masonry wall. In such cases, as well as under houses without basements, be sure that openings have been left in this wall for ventilation. Otherwise the dampness under the porch floor may cause decay in the wood. If possible, look under the porch and examine the condition of the joists, particularly if the house has been standing for several years. Decay in wood is caused by a vegetable fungus growth that lives on the wood fiber. To live, these fungi need air, warmth and water. Even the 'dry-rot' in wood is the work of a fungus that needs moisture. If wood is protected from moisture it will not decay. Unseasoned, green lumber contains a large amount of water—25 per cent or more—a sufficient reason, even if we disregard shrinkage, why it should not be used in a house. If the ends of beams, for example, are inclosed in masonry walls, the wood can not dry out; in fact, it may even absorb moisture. As a result, it often decays.

Steps Wide; Not Too Steep.

"Notice the porch steps and see that they are sufficiently wide and not too steep. In order to drain off the water the treads should slope a little toward the nosing or outer edge. So with the porch floor, which should drain away from the house.

"Adequate ventilation should be provided also under any part of the house where there is no cellar.

"Observe carefully the base of porch columns. They are often built so that water collects at the bottom, to cause early delay. This may be avoided by having an air groove to permit drainage and ventilation; a better but slightly more expensive way is to use a cast-iron plinth. If the porch has a wood floor, the tongue-and-grooved joints should be painted with white lead before setting to shut out moisture, although in severe climates square-edged flooring is sometimes used with open joints, one-fourth inch wide, to permit melting snow to drain off rapidly. Cypress is a durable wood for porch floors and so is redwood, as well as heart Southern pine, Douglas fir and larch; edge-grained material is to be preferred.

"Now look at the ceiling of the porch. It is probably covered with ceiling of one of the softwoods, fitted together with tongue-and-groove joints. It may, however, be plastered. There should be no sign of stain from leakage between the porch roof and the side of the house, as this would indicate faulty metal flashing or none at all.

Advice on Tile Floors.

"You may have tile floors on the porches and stoops and also tile on the terrace. If so, the tile should be quarry or vitreous paving tile. You can test it by moistening your finger and touching it to the face of the tile; if the moisture is soaked up quickly, the tile is only semivitreous and unsuited to exterior use. If it is highly glazed, it may scratch or spall. It should be pitched so as to drain away from the building.

"Shutters or blinds are now used in most localities more as a matter of appearance than of utility. In some colonial types of homes, blinds add just the right touch of hominess and apparent comfort; in other types they might be incongruous, although in any case they do add protection in severe weather, and security during your absence.

"And here is a good time to find out if screens for all windows, doors and open porches are included with the house. If they are, remember to examine and count them when you come to their storage place. Copper screens offer the advantage of long life without rusting. The frames, whether of wood or metal, should be fitted tightly and firmly together. If they are of the sliding type, see that the tongues which slide in the grooves are unbroken and straight and that each screen is numbered for the opening in which it belongs. The screening at the bottom of doors should be reinforced, as it is subject to kicks from impatient feet.

"You have now had an opportunity to form a fairly accurate idea of the quality of workmanship which has gone into the outside walls. An impression has been obtained also of the care taken in maintaining the yard, the shrubbery and the fences. These are all weather vanes pointing to how well the house was built and how well it has been kept up.

"Neat-looking masonry, copper gutters and down spouts, snug-fitting woodwork, and provision for surface drainage all indicate that the builder has made conscientious effort to erect a house that will endure. Whereas, on the other hand, chipped or honeycombed concrete or stucco, loose mortar in brickwork, wide cracks between ends of siding and window or other trim, rust stains from an inferior grade of hardware, thin or flaked-off painting, are a sure index that the builder has skimped. And if he has skimped where the results are visible

ERA OF SKYSCRAPER ENDING, PREDICTION

Now Seen as Curiosities of Future; Congestion in Cities Fading.

The skyscraper era is closing and the tall buildings of today may be the curiosities of the future, according to William Orr Ludlow, of New York, chairman of the committee on industrial relations of the American Institute of Architects.

"It is probable," says Mr. Ludlow, in a report to the institute, "that skyscrapers will not be built again for many a long day—perhaps never."

The exodus from the cities of America already has begun, Mr. Ludlow finds, and the congestion, of which the skyscraper is a product, is slowly yielding. The five-day week, he adds, is virtually an accomplished fact, and the four-day week is just around the corner, "for we shall keep on inventing ingenious machinery to replace hand work."

Architects must prepare for great building activity, Mr. Ludlow asserts. He recommends that the "costly, haphazard fashion" of former days be disregarded and that future works be planned with careful study and comprehensive scheming for the greatest economic use and development.

Great Change in Buildings.

"We shall see a great change in our buildings as soon as money begins to circulate again," Mr. Ludlow continues, "and this change will be not only in style but in kind.

"Breaking away from the traditional forms of architecture will bring about the change in style and the increase in leisure time will make a demand for the kind of building that leisure time will need

"The kind of building that will be required first will certainly not be the skyscraper or the factory; dwellings and institutional buildings, schools, hospitals, churches and similar noncommercial buildings probably will lead the way.

"There will be, however, a new factor in the situation that will mean great building along another line. This is the shorter hours of labor and longer hours of leisure. Whether the outcome is a five-day or a four-day week, the average man and woman will have an unprecedented amount of leisure time that will be filled with recreation and amusement.

Revolutionized by Automobile.

"Already the automobile has nearly revolutionized our manner of living, and it is going to be the means of making the greatest use of out-of-doors and the buildings that go with it."

The time is not far away, Mr. Ludlow declares, when the heart of our great American cities will be abandoned as places for residence, amusement and shopping. He believes they will be given over to office buildings, centers for the distribution of freight and passengers, by rail, bus and airplane.

"Amusements, shopping and residence are already beginning the process of decentralization, as one can readily see by the establishment in suburban towns of great branches of our finest department stores, of elaborate moving picture houses and legitimate theaters, by the popularity of out-of-town apartment houses and even in these times when there is apparently no money for building, people have found money for building private residences in suburbs and country," Mr. Ludlow goes on.

"City congestion reached its limit in 1929, and the many nostrums which simply seemed to make the disease worse are giving way to the obvious cure—taking the people away from the city and not into it.

"We are going to turn our attention to parks, municipal and national, and the building of swimming pools, ourdoor gymnasiums and country hotels.

Theaters Will Flourish.

"The additional leisure will also promote buildings of many sorts for indoor recreation and amusement. Theaters and movie houses will flourish; great gymnasia for football, baseball, tennis, skating, and the like, will be built to make outdoor sports possible indoors for winter and at night.

"Our colleges, schools, hospitals and charitable institutions are even now at full capacity, and better times and more available money will bring about a great expansion of these and the new housing necessary to accommodate them."

Wiping out the eighteenth amendment, without the return of the saloon, but with more general leisure, may well bring about a revival in this country of the European manner of drinking, Mr. Ludlow observes. He points out that America, in such an event, will build beer gardens, dance pavilions and music halls on a great scale.

"We shall also build many straight highways for traffic and travel," he concludes, "and winding roads for scenic beauty for pleasure driving.

Playgrounds and Links.

"Landscaping, planting, flowers, bridges, pavilions for rest, recreation and refreshment, public playgrounds and golf courses will, of course, accompany these in ever-increasing numbers.

"What the effect of all this will be upon us as a people is another question, its answer depending in a great measure, perhaps, on whether we build along without recreational facilities, more schools, churches, libraries and charitable institutions and whether we rebuild our slums with decent habitations.

"But architects, engineers, city planners, landscape architects, builders, park boards and public officials will do well to think a little in advance of the inevitable trend of affairs. They should prepare for great building activity, taking account of our rapidly changing conditions and probable mode of living, so that whatever is done shall not be done in the costly, haphazard fashion of former days, but shall be planned for the greatest economic use, and the most adequate future development."

Home at 3 Kingsbury drive, in South Woodside Park, Md., sold for Commander F. P. Williams to Mr. and Mrs. Richard I. Ray through the office of Goss Realty Co.

NEW HOME IS SOLD TO RICHARD I. RAY

The home at 3 Kingsbury drive has been sold for Commander F. P. Williams to Mr. and Mrs. Richard I. Ray through Goss Realty Co.

This is one of three dwellings presented recently by the Goss Co.

These three delightful dwellings are in South Woodside Park, Md. They are located at 1, 3 and 5 Kingsbury drive, one block south of Colesville pike, one block west of Mrs. K's Toll House Tavern and about five blocks from the traffic light in Silver Spring.

These three new brick bungalows are part of a group of homes being built by Commander Williams in this popular new development.

The bungalows are of early colonial design, closely followinig the architecture of the period and illustrate the American, English and French type of construction. A. F. Thelander is the architect.

Contain Five Rooms.

The houses face the south, with a frontage of at least 50 feet each on Kingsbury drive, and are located on lots 8, 9 and 10 in block A, the north side of which abuts the Colesville pike.

All of the bungalows contain five rooms and bath with a finished stairway to the second floor, which is floored and can be converted into two additional rooms.

Electric refrigeration, electric clock, Oxford cabinets and indirect lighting feature the kitchen equipment, which includes either a gas or electric range. Latest type plumbing has been installed, including modern sink, tile bath and shower with Pembroke tub and laundry tubs.

Bathroom and kitchen are painted in green and ivory, and the rooms are papered with colonial wall paper throughout. Added refinements include fireplace in the living room, oak floors throughout, slate roof and Armstrong linoleum on the kitchen floor.

Lawns Are Attractive.

All of the houses are thoroughly waterproofed and screened and all windows and doors are metal weather-stripped. Lawns have been attractively graded and sodded and planted with shrubbery.

Plans for an immediate improvement of Kingsbury drive through the South Woodside Park development have been completed.

Commander Williams has taken an active part in Montgomery County building and real estate activities since his retirement from the United States naval service after the war.

For a number of years he carried on building activities in the Woodside and North Woodside sections.

and apparent, what do you imagine he has done inside the walls and floors where the materials and workmanship are concealed?

As you enter the house, remember again to distinguish between the essential and the superficial. Certain features which may appear objectionable can often be easily corrected. Novelties and luxuries, labor-saving devices and conveniences, can usually be added to a structurally sound house, but serious structural defects are difficult and expensive, if not impossible, to remedy.

Building Permits

The District government was issued a permit last week by the Office of District Building Inspector Oehmann to build a one-story brick assembly hall for the District Workhouse at Occoquan, Va. The cost of the building is $30,000.

A. S. Lord, four two-story brick residences at 417-19-21-23 Longfellow street northwest; cost, $15,000.

Rebecca Allen, two-story frame residence at 1122 Forty-eighth street northeast; cost, $3,000.

Prospect Hill Cemetery, concrete and brick wall at North Capitol and W streets northeast; cost $2,000.

Joseph W. Strohman, two-story brick dwelling at 3419 South Dakota avenue northeast; cost, $5,000.

Robert W. Werth, two one-story concrete and frame dwellings at 3009 and 3011 Clinton street northeast; cost, $6,000.

Horned Rabbit Exhibited.

Texarkana, Tex. (U.P.).—Texas, long noted for its cattle, can now boast of rabbits with horns. A rabbit with two horns protruding from the base of the ears was exhibited here by Mrs. Max E. Bertch. It was killed on a farm near Old Boston, Tex.

SYNTHETIC STONES MADE FROM WASTE

Chemists Obtain New Products From Limestone Quarries for Buildings.

Development of a synthetic building stone from limestone quarry wastes, which may be applied to the construction both of the small home and the modern skyscraper, is reported to the American Chemical Society by Prof. R. Norris Shreve, of Purdue University.

For durability, adaptability, attractiveness and economy the synthetic stone compares favorably with its natural rivals, according to Prof. Shreve, who conducted the research with Prof. H. C. Peffer, head of the department of chemical engineering at Purdue, and R. L. Harrison, of Lafayette, Ind.

The stone was perfected in the Purdue laboratories. It is made of pulverized shale reacting with an alkaline earth base to knit together particles of limestone waste from the quarries in southwestern Indiana.

Important Role Seen.

"This new product resulting from the chemists' test tube and modern manufacturing methods," says Prof. Shreve, "promises to play an important role in buildings of the future because of cost on a par with those now in use, its lasting qualities and its fireproof character."

The stone is made by thoroughly mixing the pulverized material in proper proportions and moistening to the dampness of the earth, then compressing it in a polished steel form under a pressure of 2,500 pounds to the square inch.

"The mixture," Prof. Shreve continues, "may be left in its original color or coloring material obtained by the use of various chemicals may be added before the pressing process, thus making the coloring part of the stone.

"This prevents any fading, the manufactured stone having retained its original colors even after eight years of testing on roofs, on side walls and on the ground, withstanding rigors of all types of weather."

Completed in Two Hours.

After the slabs are pressed they are let stand for a short time in order to permit any internal moisture differential to adjust itself so that an even water content is assured throughout the "green" fabricated shape. The chemical reaction between the alumino-silicic acid and an alkaline earth base is completed by two hours of "cooking" under steam in an indurator.

Another brief cooling period completes the stone-making process, so that it may either be polished or used at once in any type of building, inside or out.

"The entire process of grinding, mixing, pressing, 'steaming' and finishing takes barely a day, thus yielding in a few hours the man-made stone which nature requires decades or centuries to produce," Prof. Shreve asserts.

"X-ray studies have shown reactions after the process to be complete, and they likewise have aided the chemical tests necessary in working out the different steps in manufacture.

"The stone may be processed on a fiber backing to form an inseparable unit, thus giving proper insulation for a home or business building, and also greatly reducing the weight.

Unsightly White Removed.

"Due to the fact that the alkaline salts which cause the common efflorescence on buildings, the unsightly white on brick and discoloration of natural limestone, are made inactive, this objection to many materials is overcome in the new synthetic stone.

"In small home construction plans as worked out at this time, the stone is made in slabs of 4 feet long, 2 feet wide and 2 inches thick. Bolts are molded into the slabs and they are fastened to steel studding which is spaced 4 feet apart, instead of the customary 16 inches, as in other dwellings."

While this process has been used thus far only with limestone and shale, it is pointed out by Prof. Shreve that it could be used in a similar manner at or near the marble and granite quarries or slate deposits found in various sections of the United States, thereby giving convenient locations for manufacturing the new material and effecting a saving in freight rates.

The economic value of the stone, Prof. Shreve adds, is based on the use of commonly occurring materials and the utilization of quarry waste and dumps.

"Availability of raw materials," he concludes, "will permit low transportation cost for finished materials. This, coupled with the relatively simple and consequently low cost of the chemical processing and fabrication, produces a relatively low cost structural material."

Stocks Remain Unchanged In Irregular, Active Sales

Commodity Issues Advance on Half-Day Trading of 958,610 Shares.

New York, April 15 (A.P.).—Wild gyrations of dollar exchange provided the chief interest in week-end financial markets today.

Stocks bobbed about irregularly and actively. Net advances being limited largely to the commodity classifications. However, financial gains and losses showed a rather even distribution. Demand for most leaders appeared to have held up well, especially those representing production of metals, oil and other staples.

A sweeping advance in foreign exchange terminated shortly before noon when it was learned that two licenses had been granted for gold shipments from this country, in addition to yesterday's exportation to Holland. This news brought a swift reversal in trend and some rates dropped just as precipitantly as they had risen. The market was very thin by reason of European holidays, but it was evident, both from the action of exchange and of certain stocks, that speculators were being influences by an inflationary psychology.

American Telephone, breaking nearly 4 points net, made the poorest appearance among the so-called pivotal issues. This company's first quarter earnings amounted to $1.72 a share on the basis of dividends received, though not wholly earned. Operations of the Bel' system as a whole, including Western Electric's deficit, brought parent company net down to about $1 a share. President Gifford had nothing to say regarding future dividends. The company suffered a net loss of 340,000 installations in the period.

American Can, American Tobacco "B", General Mills, American Smelting, United Fruit, Continental Can, Corn Products, International Silver preferred, International Nickel, Standard Oil of New Jersey, Seaboard Oil, Columbian Carbon, Endicott Johnson and several sugar shares were among the leaders on the upside, returning gains that ranged from fractions to more than 2 points. Rails dragged slightly, while utilities were mostly lower. Consolidated Gas and Public Service of New Jersey each lost a point. Sales totaled 958,610 shares.

Preliminary reports from steel manufacturing centers suggested that the improvement in operations had acquired some momentum and that output would again expand next week, perhaps to a new high for the year.

BONDS RECORD RISE AS LIBERTIES MOUNT

Irregular Trading Results in Slight Gain; Sales, $6,884,000.

New York, April 15 (A.P.).—Definite trends generally were lacking in the bond market today and prices shifted about somewhat irregularly throughout the brief session.

Expanded activity in a few instances lifted the sales volume to $6,884,000, par value, but for the most part trading was at a minimum. The average for 60 domestic corporate loans edged up one-tenth of a point.

Liberty fourth 4¼s, with a turnover of 1,455 bonds, were the center of interest in the Federal section. This issue, closing at 103, was up 17-32ds of a point following the announcement of President Roosevelt that it would not be called on October 15. Liberty 3½s gained 10-32ds of a point while the first 4¼s eased fractionally. With the exception of Treasury 4s, which were also slightly off, other Government loans were fairly steady and quiet.

German obligations were again heavy, the Reich 7s losing 4 points and the 5½s slipping off ⅞ of a point. Corporate, State and municipal issues of Germany dropped 1 to around 3 points, although most of these were exceptionally inactive. Canadian issues were up a point or more.

Domestic corporation bonds were fairly steady. There were a number of moderate gains recorded by secondary issues of both the utility and industrial sections. Best advances were held by some loans of Goodyear, Certain-teed Products, Chile Copper, Laclede Gas, Phillips Petroleum, Pure Oil, Purity Bakeries, Remington Arms, Remington Rand and Western Union.

Gains and losses in the transportation group were about evenly divided.

Europe's Moneys Fluctuate As U. S. Again Exports Gold

New York, April 15 (A.P.).—Operating in a thin market today, European currencies soared rapidly in early trading and then, with equal speed, executed a right-about face, lost most of the rise, and closed irregularly.

This roller coster performance represented the cumulative effect of a crop of fast circulating and unfounded rumors, confusion regarding Treasury policy toward gold exports and abnormal trading conditions due to the Easter holiday in most of the European capitals.

Following yesterday's movement of $600,000 gold to Holland announcement was made today of the granting of two more licenses to European points. The Guarantee Trust Co. of New York was named as one of the banks receiving a license for a shipment to France and Holland.

The granting of these three licenses was interpreted here as indicating the Treasury's willingness to permit gold exports if the position of the dollar in foreign markets justified such action. Under the emergency banking law no gold can move without permission from Washington authorities.

All of the gold standard currencies broke sharply from their high levels as soon as the news regarding new gold shipments became known. French francs fell from a peak figure of 4.08 cents to a close of 3.95 cents, a drop of 2⅛ points from yesterday's final figure. The belga touched 14.20 cents and closed at 14, a net decline for the day of 3 points; Swiss francs rose to 20 cents, and the close of 19.60 was a gain for the day of 12 points; and Dutch guilders, the stormy petrel of the list, after soaring to 41.15 cents finished the day at 40.64 cents, a gain for the day of only 2 points.

The daily gold statement of the New York Federal Reserve Bank up to noon today showed no imports or exports, and no net change in the stock of the yellow metal held under earmark for foreign account. The bank was notified of the receipt of $290,000 in gold from China at San Francisco.

No announcement was made as to the amount of the gold involved in the Guaranty Trust Co.'s shipment. It is destined for France and Holland and will go from New York early next week, it is understood.

New York, April 15 (A.P.).—Taking heart from renewed strength on the big board, curb prices advanced moderately in the early trading, but eased at the close under realizing. Transactions amounted to 106,000 shares, compared with 72,000 a week ago.

The late profit taking wiped out early gains in such leaders as Aluminum Co. of America, Deere, and Swift issues. Stocks like Humble Oil, Montgomery Ward "A," Quaker Oats preferred and New Jersey Zinc were able to retain advances ranging from 1 to 3 points.

Utilities were irregular and inactive except in the leaders. Electric Bond & Share was firm early, but faded rapidly near the close. American Gas & Electric improved fractionally. New York Telephone preferred jumped nearly 2 points on small sales, and Commonwealth Edison climbed a point.

Automobile Salesroom Enlarged by Barnes

J. B. Barnes, Washington's oldest exclusive used car dealer located at 1729 Fourteenth street northwest, has completed the enlargement of his salesroom, which today gives him the largest display floor in the city for used cars.

"It is my faith in the fact that I believe automobile conditions are rapidly on the upgrade that has prompted me at this time to make the alterations in my salesroom and take on additional space. The merchandising of used cars is very similar to that of new cars, the buyers like to be able to walk around the car they have in mind and inspect it from all angles," said Mr. Barnes in speaking about his expansion at this time.

Dollar Higher in Paris After Unofficial Dealing

Paris, April 15 (A.P.).—The American dollar in the course of unofficial trading this afternoon showed improvement, recovering from 25 francs, which was quoted by banks at noon, to 25.16 to 25.20.

The last official closing was 25.35 on Thursday. The bourse is closed until Tuesday because of the Easter holidays.

While unofficial quotations well below the gold point are attracting attention, financial circles feel that the official opening Tuesday should give a more accurate line-up of the dollar position, as unofficial trading has been comparatively limited.

St. Louis, April 15 (A.P.).—The Public Service Co., operators of the St. Louis Street Car System, today joined in an application filed by one of its creditors in Federal court for appointment of a receiver to take over and operate the company. The petition stated the company is unable to pay its current obligations by reason of banks having called for immediate payment Wednesday of the company's collateral loans amounting to $10,000,000. It also stated that the banks have notified the company its funds on deposit at the time were being applied to payment of the loan.

A hearing on the petition was scheduled for 2 p. m. today before Federal Judge C. B. Davis.

DEPRESSION IS LAI TO DEBTS BY BABSO

Expert Favors Voluntar Adjustment of Loans as Remedy.

By ROGER W. BABSON.

Babson Park, Mass., April 15.—Reckless going into debt was one o the primary causes of the depression It follows that getting out of debt i necessary to recovery.

If the purpose of the nationa bankruptcy bill and the farm mortgage bill is to facilitate voluntary adjustment of interest and debts to basis of reality, I favor it: but w should not be too hasty about arbitrarily relieving debtors of their jus obligations to pay interest and taxe on their agreed contracts.

If the debtor is made to feel tha all he has to do is to call on th Government when in a pinch and th Government will force the creditor t sacrifice for his benefit, then we hav established a dangerous precedent. I would undermine the integrity of th people and encourage free and eas practice of going into debt, which, I have said, was the cause of thi depression.

Readjustment Must Be Voluntary.

In 1929 total debt of this country public and private, was $154,600,000,000, an increase of 34 per cen since 1922.

It was divided as follows: Farm $12,200,000,000; railroads, $12,700,000,000; Federal, State and local, $30,100,000,000; corporations, $74,600,000,000 and individuals, $25,000,000,000. Whe our national income was $80,000,000,000 a year we were able to get by fo a time with this staggering load, bu when income dropped to $30,000,000,000, as at present, the charges becam top heavy to meet.

We, however, can never build prosperity on repudiation. Voluntary readjustments, yes!—but to force creditors, either by arbitrary or unlawfu means, to give up their just claim against their will is wrong in principle and harmful to business.

Exponents of Cancellation.

Exponents of partial or total deb cancellation talk as if there were clear division between debtors an creditors, that the creditors were al rich people and the debtors all poo people. Nothing could be furthe from the truth.

There is no clear-cut distinctio between debtor and creditor classes. Every holder of a savings bank passbook, every life insurance policyholder, every widow or orphan dependent o an annuity, or on support from endowed charities whose funds are invested in bonds and mortgages, is creditor, and it is these creditors wh would be harmed most of all if compulsory or confiscatory abrogation o contracts should be allowed.

Furthermore, you can not expect t obtain the necessary credit for business expansion if lenders have no assurance that their contracts will b held valid.

Changing Value of Dollar.

Much is heard from debtors abou dishonest dollars—dollars that hav increased in value since they borrowed the money and hence forc them to pay back in high value money what they borrowed in lo valued money. It is true that th value of the dollar in its purchasin power for commodities has increase to $1.33 compared with 1929.

This is an advantage to the credito but it is no excuse for cancellatio of debts. Suppose the shoe were o the other foot! Suppose a man borrows a thousand dollars today—dollars of high purchasing power.

If commodity prices rise and th purchasing power decreases to, let u say, 66 cents, as it did in 1920, the the lender will receive only 66 cent on the dollar, or $660 in purchasin power for the $1,000 he loaned. W never hear any propaganda for increasing the face value of a loa when prices rise, but we now hear great deal about decreasing the fac value of a loan because prices hav fallen. It is a poor rule that won't work both ways!

An Ideal Situation.

Of course, the ideal situation woul be a dollar of stable purchasing power, but if, and until, the wide fluctuations of the business cycle ar some day ironed out, the value o the dollar will continue to fluctuate. The scandalous pyramiding of debts was one of the primary reasons fo the financial collapse, the decline i prices, and the stagnation of business.

Excessive greed, extravagance, reckless speculation were responsible for piling up this debt mountain. If w could eliminate the abuses of credit, we could not only reduce the losses during a depression, but—what is vastly more important—we could prevent undue previous inflation and hence greatly prevent conditions such as now exist. It is dangerous to encourage this national habit of excessive borrowing by making it easy for borrowers to repudiate debts whe the day of reckoning arrives.

Signs of Improvement.

Signs of business improvement are already here. The composite of pig iron prices recently advanced for the first time since May, 1929. Motor car production is now showing a better than seasonal increase. Lumber orders in recent weeks are the best so far this year.

Freight car loadings are slowly moving upward. Steel operations have advanced and electricity output is making the best comparable showing for more than a year. I am optimistic on business provided this debt problem is handled justly, but we can never build permanent prosperity on the principle of repudiation. Furthermore, I would advise business men to be very careful about future borrowing. A good rule is: Never borrow more than your average annual net earnings for a truly representative period.

Keep your borrowing within an amount that you can pay within year. Avoid borrowing for fixed capital or speculation, and always be entirely out of debt at your bank for at least three months of each year.

WHEAT VALUES RISE ON INFLATION HOPES

Washington Relief Reports Aid Upturn; Other Grains Higher.

Chicago, April 15 (A.P.).—Soaring anew, largely because of inflation talk, wheat went about 2 cents a bushel higher today and outdid the season's previous top for September contracts.

At today's maximum, wheat showed 20 cents advance in 3½ months, but heavy profit taking sales toward the last wiped out part of the gain. Higher quotations on the British pound sterling were interpreted by many wheat traders as indicative of a possible monetary agreement with this country.

Wheat closed nervous, ⅞ to 1⅜ above Thursday's finish; corn, ⅛ to ¼ up; oats, ⅜ to ½ advance, and provisions at a rise of 5 to 12 cents.

News From Washington.

Washington reports that relief measures so far undertaken would obligate Federal Government expenditure of more than $5,000,000,000 attracted special notice among wheat traders. This was connected with other supposed evidence of tendencies toward inflation. Persistent dearth of rain in drought districts of domestic winter wheat territory acted also as a stimulus to upturns in prices.

Some trade authorities asserted that the outlook for a sensationally small United States winter wheat crop this season, together with uncertainty as to spring wheat prospects, would preclude any important price downturns. These authorities contended also that the market would work higher on the motive power already furnished and would boil over in the event of any setback to this country's spring wheat prospects or to those of Europe. Most of today's buying came in comparatively small individual orders, but in the aggregate formed an almost irresistible volume.

Corn and oats borrowed strength from wheat.

Rye was an exception to the trend, of other grain and averaged lower as a result of selling that appeared to originate Northwest.

Provisions were responsive to inflation talk.

COMMODITIES PUSH SECURITY MARKETS

Speculative Quarters Count on Inflation; Wheat Leads in Rise.

New York, April 15 (A.P.).—Belated spring recovery in business, together with speculation based on inflation agitation, gave financial markets a substantial boost this week.

Business indices generally remained extremely low, but clear indications that the effects of the banking crisis had largely worn off, together with high hopes of the administration's plans to stimulate business recovery, generated more bullishness than the markets had seen in some time.

Inflation was on every tongue in speculative quarters, and European gold currencies rose sharply against the dollar for a time later in the week, in the extremely thin, or largely nominal markets, resulted from control of dollar transactions by the Federal Reserve and the Easter banking holidays abroad.

Gold Exports Renewed.

Some exports of gold were permitted, to bolster the dollar, and bankers pointed out that with this country's favorable balance of payments, the dollar could be kept around parity, save for temporary fluctuations.

The action of the bond market indicated a belief in financial quarters that such inflation as may result from relief and reconstruction programs would avoid currency depreciation, for despite some irregularity, the market as a whole acted well, particularly the U. S. Governments. The Standard Statistics index of 60 corporate issues rose .9 of a point to 64.6 during the week.

The stock market came close to the peak levels reached in the uprush which greeted the resumption of trading after the banking holiday a month ago. The price index of 90 representative issues rose 3.6 points during the week to 52.8, compared to 55 on March 16.

Wheat Leads in Rise.

Wheat led the commodities in a spirited rise, resulting from the short winter crop, as indicated by the Government estimate. Cotton advanced less sharply. A wide assortment of staples moved higher, including rubber, sugar, hides, silver, copper, coffee and others.

Speculation in equities was particularly notable in the so-called commodity shares. The long dormant oils and coppers came to the fore.

The most encouraging business reports came from steel and automobiles, and the pre-Easter retail trade reached the best levels since Christmas. Wall street wondered how much farther into the spring business recovery would carry before feeling the depressing effects of the approach of summer. One of the first important first-quarter earnings statements was American Telephone, and it was somewhat disappointing.

Wall Street Briefs

New York, April 15 (A.P.).—Leading commodity markets throughout the country, with the exception of the Chicago Board of Trade and the New York Silk Exchange, were closed today in an extended observance of the Easter week-end.

Production of newsprint in the United States and Canada last month was 213,644 tons compared with 192,695 in February and 266,792 in March, 1932. Output of American mills last month was 76,566 tons against 67,085 in February and 100,034 a year ago. The statistics are compiled by the Newsprint Service Bureau.

Award of two tunnel contracts, aggregating $4,000,000, on the Colorado aqueduct in California contributed to the $13,046,000 total of heavy construction awards for the week ended April 10, says "Engineering News-Record." In the previous week the total was $17,256,000, of which $8,000,000 represented a single housing award in New York City.

Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. reports that sales for the five weeks ended April 1 totaled $74,981,144 compared with $88,923,239 for the same 1932 period, a decrease of about 15.7 per cent. Tonnage volume was down 4.8 per cent.

$1 COTTON ADVANCE MARKS WEEK'S SALE

Goods Being Bought More Liberally; Experts See Possible Drop.

(Associated Press.)

The last week added another $1 a bale to the value of cotton for a net advance of $3 in two weeks. The average price of middling ⅞-inch rose to 6.70 cents a pound, compared with 6.42 the week before, and 6.06 on the same date last year. May future contracts gained 27 to 31 points, ranging from 6.72 cents at New Orleans to 6.84 at Chicago.

Government reports said there was a "better feeling" in the market with almost all grades of cotton inquired for, while holders of the staple continued to be indifferent sellers at price levels which are higher than for several months.

Dry goods centers said buyers have been purchasing cotton goods more liberally recently at quotations somewhat higher than those prevailing the week before.

Raw Cotton Gains.

The advance in raw cotton was brought about by increased outside demand, covering by the trade and lack of contracts sufficient to meet the demand. With speculative enthusiasm broadening, some observers said it was possible that prices might go even higher before values are readjusted. Limited trade buying orders for several months indicates an overdue long position of substantial dimensions.

As a normal course of events a reaction would seem imminent, if for nothing more than to strengthen the technical position, but profit-taking has been aggressive on the way up. It has checked violent advances and may have stabilized the market on a higher plane than generally understood. Meanwhile, however, the trade is advising purchases only on price recessions. It still wants to see what Washington is going to do about farm relief, currency inflation and tariff revision.

Although planting has been seriously delayed by wet weather in some sections, it is believed the season is too far advanced for any provision of the farm relief bill to influence cotton this year. The general trade is against the bill, but comment has quieted down on almost certain indication it will be passed.

Look to Wallace.

Instead, cotton men are discussing the fact that none of the provisions of the bill are mandatory and seem inclined to believe Secretary Wallace will move cautiously with his price-boosting program. One firm referred to President Roosevelt as "the safety valve which has prevented any explosion in the cotton market so far" and predicted that, regardless of the form of farm relief, authority under it would be carefully administered.

Cotton is worth 15 to 20 cents a pound in normal times and some well versed members of the trade believe the price can be advanced substantially above current levels without undue disruption of business. They say there is a future for cotton in the administration's desire to bring about higher commodity prices.

Right now the market seems to be in that technical position where it can be easily influenced. Small buying or selling orders have immediate effect. The market is sensitive to international monetary developments, the advance in British sterling having considerable influence on the buying side. With a world conference called to readjust tariffs in the interest of trade and Great Britain's gold reserve up to the highest point in history there is wide expectation of increased exports of American cotton.

Foreclosure Is Started On Hudson River Line

New York, April 15 (A.P.).—The Bankers Trust Co., as trustee under a first mortgage for $1,500,000 which has been reduced to $1,050,000 since it was given, March 1, 1927, today began a foreclosure suit against the Hudson River Day Line.

Advances Started In Metal Markets

Copper Active With Tin at New High Level; Zinc Is Steady.

New York, April 15 (A.P.).—Advances were reported in practically all metal markets this week, although demand became less active at the higher levels.

Copper was fairly active. Buying came chiefly from foreign and speculative sources, while domestic consumers were reserved in their purchases, apparently awaiting definite announcements of production curtailment or shutdown of mines.

However, the market was without official confirmation of such reports and while some producers were holding electrolytic ¼ cent higher at 5½ cents, smelters were offering at 5⅜ cents.

Tin Prices Rally.

Tin prices rallied to the previous high levels for the year, which had been established during the banking holidays. A large business was reported at the advance, with consumers covering both nearby and second quarter requirements.

Sentiment was aided by reports of increasing activity in the tin plate and automobile industries. However, quieter conditions prevailed later in the week.

Firmness of other metals attracted buying of lead and following a period of active demand producers raised asking prices. The buying extended into May shipment positions, but after consumers, representing most branches of the industries, had filled requirements demand tapered off.

Zinc Holds Steady.

Zinc held steady at the advance, with sellers reserved after booking larger orders from leading consumers in the previous week. The improved statistical outlook following inauguration of mine curtailment schedules was reflected by firmness of the ore market.

Despite the better tone to other metals, antimony remained nominal in continued absence of buying interest.

Steel ingot production rose 3 points to an estimated 19½ per cent of capacity of increased demand from a variety of sources. Automobile manufacturers were outstanding buyers, but specifications were also released for rails, tin plate, bars and sheets. Prices held steady. Following recent active demand for pig iron, somewhat quieter conditions prevailed, but prices held firm.

$361,375 IS EARNED BY AMERICAN CHICLE

Consolidated Copper Mines Reports Net Loss of $633,203.

New York, April 15 (A.P.).—American Chicle Co. reports first quarter net profit of $361,375 against $434,811 in the same period of 1932.

Consolidated Copper Mines Corporation reports 1932 net loss of $633,203 before depletion compared with loss of $605,781 in 1931.

International Paper & Power Co. today reported consolidated net loss of $8,575,728 for 1932. This contrasts with net income of $618,239, or 67 cents a share on the 7 per cent preferred stock in 1931. Gross sales totaled $129,531,271 against $147,695,229 in the previous year.

The company's total production of paper and pulp in 1932 was 1,321,464 tons compared with 1,490,240 tons in 1931. Power production increased slightly, due to improved water power conditions, but the report said there had been "substantial decline" in demand in most territories served and much of last year's output had to be sold as secondary power at unprofitable rates.

Per share earnings of corporations reporting last week with comparisons with the previous year included the following:

Year ended December 31.	1932	1931

John L. Johnston, president of the Lambert Co., said today before sailing for Europe that he believed earnings of the company in the first quarter of 1933 approximated $1.10 a share, more than covering the period's dividend of $1. In the first quarter of 1932 Lambert earned $1.90 a share.

Unfavorable dividend changes this week, according to the Standard Statistics Co. tabulation, numbered 76 compared with 107 last week. There were five favorable changes against six a week ago.

Farm Machinery Soon to Improve

Commodity Price Pick-Up Expected to Assist Industry.

New York, April 15 (A.P.).—With commodity prices stepping briskly up to higher levels, the farm machine industry now has hopes of soon giving a more profitable interpretation to "receivables." What the farmer owes the implement companies in the way of payments due on the machinery he has bought is known as "receivables." The current large volume of receivables, in contrast with the low level of farm machinery sales, has been one of the major worries of the larger implement concerns.

The Standard Statistics Co., points out that the recent gross receivables of the International Harvester Co. were estimated at $119,751,483, those of Deere & Co. at $45,488,198, and those of the J. I. Case Co. at $20,394,903. During the first two years of the depression, while production was shrinking rapidly, aggregate receivables of these companies actually expanded moderately. Last year, even, the percentage contraction in receivables was considerably smaller than the decline in outturn. Because of the low state of farming, not only has the collection of receivables lagged, but failure of interest payments on these debts has formed an important item. During 1932 it has been figured that interest due on receivables held by the three largest companies probably totaled some $12,000,000.

The value of farm machinery production in 1932 has been estimated at no more than $100,000,000, a total less than one-half that for the preceding year. Production for 1931 was more than 10 per cent below that of 1922, the low point for the post-war slump. The leading farm implement concerns base their hopes for further recovery, and the strengthening of their receivables position, largely upon governmental measures for the relief of agriculture.

The most attractive room in this beautiful home is the large den, located on the second floor. Its windows are draped with a very heavy damask, interwoven in wool, blending in colors. The all-electric kitchen is most unusual and glazed chintz, harmonizing in colors, completes this room.

GROWTH REPORTED BY BUILDING GROUP

Assets Gain $888,650, With 752 New Loans in First Quarter.

By THOMAS M. CAHILL.

A compilation of figures just completed by William S. Quinter, secretary of the Building Association Council of the District of Columbia, for the quarter ending March 31, show a substantial growth for the first three months of the year 1933.

The gain in assets was $888,650. There were 752 new loans made during the period for a total of $2,399,769. There were 2,558 new accounts opened by local building and loan associations.

This report is the best proof that first mortgage money is still available in Washington, D. C., although in many parts of the country there is a scarcity of funds for this purpose.

Interest in Insurance.

"It is gratifying to us and, we think, of great importance generally," Mr. Montgomery says, "that the Acacia Mutual Life Insurance Co.'s new business for the period from January to March, 1933, registered a 13 per cent gain over the corresponding three-months' period of last year.

"Especialy significant is the fact that while Acacia granted policyholders one month's grace in the payment of their premiums, in recognition of the difficulties entailed as a result of the bank holiday, the cash income of Acacia was maintained at a remarkably high level.

Evidence Is Conclusive.

"This we believe is conclusive evidence of the important place held by life insurance in the lives of our people.

"With the volume of new business increasing so notably during the critical months now behind us, we feel amply justified in looking forward to a period of continued expansion during the remainder of the year."

Mr. Montgomery is marking his fortieth year as the directing head of Acacia this year. During those four decades the company has grown from a small, local organization to one of national scope, high in the list of the great old-line life insurance companies of the country.

From its home office building at First street and Indiana avenue northwest, where more than 400 men and women are employed, are directed the activities of Acacia branches in every section of the country.

All Officers Reelected.

Reelection of all officers and directors of the Citizens Equitable Building Association of Georgetown was announced yesterday following the annual meeting last week. They are Thomas J. Stanton, president; Isaac B. Nordlinger, vice president; Harold W. Burnside, secretary; Harry L. Selby, treasurer; Mrs. Irene B. Arendes, assistant secretary; Isaac Birch, Patrick F. Carr, John Hadley Doyle, J. Leo Kolb, jr., R. E. Layton and George A. Scheele, directors.

Next Wednesday evening at the regular monthly meeting of Washington Chapter, National Association of Cost Accountants, Dr. A. Manuel Fox, chief economist of the United States Tariff Commission, will discuss the problem of the commutation and distribution of joint and by-product costs.

Dr. Fox, on account of the vast number of practical problems in his special field, is competent to elucidate this difficult problem.

The talk is to be followed by an open forum. A special invitation is extended to the governmental bureaus and to teachers and students of accounting to attend the lecture Wednesday evening at 7:30 o'clock at the Mayflower Hotel.

BILLY PIERCE, KING OF RHYTHM, DEAD

New York, April 15 (A.P.).—"Billy was rhythm, that's all. He could teach dancing by waving him hand—"

Folks from Broadway and Harlem, gathered in his studio tonight, talked about Billy Pierce, Negro soldier of fortune, who trained some of the stage's premier dancers.

Billy died this week of influenza. He was 42 and fat—no longer able to illustrate his routine.

Off the Rialto, few folks knew of Billy.

On the Rialto, the bright lights blazed with the names of his pupils: Adele Astaire, who married a son of the Duke of Devonshire; Betty Compton, who's going to marry James J. Walker; Dorothy Stone, daughter of Fred; Jack Buchanan, Claire Luce, Frances Williams, Mary Eaton and Ruby Keeler, the wife of Al Jolson.

The Charleston and the Black Bottom were Billy's handiwork. The first, Ann Pennington, Florence Mills and the Fairbanks twins made famous.

Billy, folks recalled, would sit in a corner of his studio watching his pupils.

"What you need is an exit," he'd say. "It's easy to get on the stage but its hard to get off. Takes a cullud boy to fix an exit. Something smart and fast and different. You got 64 bars to a tap dance routine. You have to make each one count."

From his birthplace in Purcellville, Va., Billy shuffled forth into a career that knew him as errand boy, porter, elevator operator, college student, newspaper editor, minstrel, soldier and dancer.

After attending Stover College at Harpers Ferry, Billy landed in Washington, served as reporter and editor of the Dispatch, a Negro newspaper; joined the Army in the World War, and then danced his way through the "sticks" to Broadway.

A NEW DEAL

WE WILL SIGN UP SIX ADDITIONAL MEN IMMEDIATELY AT OUR WASHINGTON OFFICE WHO WILL UNDERTAKE A FIVE-YEAR PROGRAM OF EARNINGS AT $34.00 PER WEEK WITH ADDITIONAL CASH PROFITS IN SAVINGS FOR THE FIVE-YEAR PERIOD OF $9,500.00.

This program of earnings and savings is something entirely new. It is a definite and practical plan for the man who wishes to cover the overhead expenses of himself and his family each week, and save a substantial additional profit. It is to such men we offer this opportunity. We prefer married men with established homes they must maintain. This is a permanent arrangement, and we are not looking for the man who is not serious-minded about his future and about getting ahead in an honest, industrious manner.

You can not make money here unless you earn it. But if you are capable of understanding and following instructions, and if you are one who likes to practice to gain skill and judgment in what he does, and if you are a worker willing to pay a working price for success, then we recommend that you come in Monday morning for an interview. It costs nothing to try. We will furnish full equipment with no deposit required. There is no expense.

We require men to be of good reputation, active and alert. This is a straightforward offer of sincere intent; to worthy men who are in need of good, substantial positions. We have tried to state the facts and requirement clearly. Please do not apply for these positions unless you feel that you can meet the requirements.

For personal interview, apply Monday morning, 9:30 to 12:30 at 201 Denrike Bldg., 1010 Vermont avenue northwest.

Bridge Bids and Bumps

By FRANK B. LORD

Fair Greece; sad relic of departed worth,
Immortal now once more, though fallen great,
She now but needs to go and find a fourth,
And in Olympic games participate
LONG, LONG AFTER BYRON.

EVERYTHING is now in readiness for the long-anticipated and carefully arranged world bridge Olympic. May 1, at 8:01 p. m., is the hour set for the beginning of this classic of contract, which will be participated in by approximately 100,000 players in practically every quarter of the globe, represented by 43 countries, and including every State in the American Union and every province of Canada, and literally by hundreds of cities and towns. Even in isolated places, far removed from the haunts of civilization, the Olympic hands will be played, as is indicated by the report that a group of players in the Dutch East Indies, 200 miles from Batavia, the nearest post-office, has been entered in the lists, and will have equal opportunity with all others to win the coveted major prizes as well as the attendant honors that go with them. These trophies are made of platinum and are said to have cost $10,000.

There will also be 350 silver trophies which will be awarded to Olympic winners in the various States, countries and provinces.

The sixteen hands that will be played have been prepared under the direction of the Olympic committee of the National Bridge Association by widely known experts, comprising Ely Culbertson, Josephine Culbertson, Theodore A. Lightner, Oswald Jacoby, Stuyvesant Wainwright, Harold S. Vanderbilt, Michael Gottlieb, John P. Matthews, Walter Malowan, O'Connor de Codrova, Milton C. Work, Walter Beinecke, Commander Winfield Liggett, jr., Gratz M. Scott and Edward C. Wolfe.

All hands of the Olympic are fixed at par both as to bidding and play, and rating is to be made accordingly, so that there is no opportunity, as in most duplicate games, of one or more pairs getting a big swing in points because of the weakness or the faulty playing of their opponents, either offensively or defensively. This feature provides a real test of merit which in any other form of play is more or less lacking.

In Washington several units have been formed from among the players of the Federal Bridge League whose members are all Government employes. The Agricultural Department will have its own unit. Other units in Washington have been organized to play at the Mayfair Club under the direction of Howe P. Cochran and Mrs. Stephen Fuqua, at the Kennedy-Warren under the direction of Mrs. Louise Guest and Mrs. Martha Lemon, at the La Salle under the direction of Mrs. Dixie T. Wright, at the Carlton under the direction of Wessel Stewart, at the Wardman under the direction of Mrs. Charles Keene, at the Shoreham under the direction of A. P. Stockvis, and at Takoma Inn under the direction of Harry Clendening. It is estimated that more than 200 pairs, or 400 players, in Washington will test their skill in the World Bridge Olympic.

THE historic and richly appointed old mansion at 1709 N street, which was the scene of many important political conferences as well as a gathering place for society when it was the home of a leader of the Senate a generation ago, is to become the headquarters of a series of bridge activities for the remainder of the spring season to which invitations are being eagerly sought by the socially and bridge elite of the Capital. Beginning Wednesday, April 26, there will be an elaborate bridge luncheon to be followed by rubber contract into which will be introduced the novelty of awarding prizes for slams—grand and little—bid and made by the players. The winning of a vulnerable grand slam contract is the goal of every bridge player's ambition, to which the making of a small slam in similar conditions is only second in the line of desire. Great are the temptations for slam bidding under the recently revised rules of the game, for great is the bonus reward for its successful accomplishment. The Vanderbilt Club, under whose auspices the Wednesday afternoon plays will be conducted, has planned to make slam bidding still more attractive and inviting by offering special awards to those bold enough and skillful enough to achieve this more or less unusual feat.

Mrs. William Cheeks and Mrs. C. G. Gilliland, wife of Commander C. G. Gilliland, U. S. N., will have charge of the luncheon and the play.

The Takoma Contract Club was organized last week "to promote and stimulate interest in contract in Takoma Park, Silver Spring, Brightwood and surrounding communities." The officers elected were: President, James A. Miller; vice president, I. N. Gulicksen; secretary-treasurer, Dorothy Clendening. Among those present at the organization meeting were Capt. and Mrs. Charles C. Allen, Capt. Flikke and party from Walter Reed Hospital, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Bean, Mr. and Mrs. I. N. Gullicksen, Mr. and Mrs. Clayton Baus, Mr. and Mrs. James A. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Goll, Mr. and Mrs. M. G. Phoebus, F. M. Lake, William Steiger, Dillow Smith, Howard Drake, Mrs. Harry Clendening and Edwin Pelot.

Harry Clendening will act as instructor and meetings will be held Friday evenings at the Takoma Inn, 415 Butternut street. Arrangements are being made to have play other than duplicate evenings throughout the week at which officers of the Army stationed at Walter Reed will participate.

CONTRACT has had a busy and successful winter season at the Washington Golf and Country Club. In addition to the Tuesday afternoon activities of ladies' day, two evening events at duplicate have been held each month, one for mixed pairs on the second Wednesday of the month and a stag play on the fourth Wednesdays. The winning pairs for the past month were Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Veerhoff and Dr. and Mrs. G. R. Huffman. The latter pair repeated their February victory in March.

The winter series of games will be brought to a close at the end of this month, but so interested are the club members in the play that it is proposed to continue the mixed pair events throughout the summer. The award of prizes for the best average of the season will be upon the basis of the computation of scores made, which is now being figured by A. P. Stockvis, who had charge of the play throughout the season.

It was found necessary to resort to an original method to determine the men's pair championship of the club. After two evenings of play two pairs, D. C. Gruver and Dr. T. D. Webb and Albert W. Howard and E. P. Brooke continued to remain tied for first place. The title was decided by having these two pairs play 24 boards against two other pairs, O. L. Veerhoff and A. B. Galt, champions of last year, and M. C. Wescott and G. R. Howard. One-half of the boards were played against each of the trial teams. In this manner the two competing pairs did not face each other across the tables, but played the same cards. Mr. Howard and Mr. Brooke finally won by the narrow margin of 1 point, the score being 12½ to 11½. The fairness of the method of decision was attested by the fact that the trial pairs scored 12 points each.

Winners in Sunday night's duplicate at the Mayfair Club were, north and south, Mrs. C. G. Gilliland and Frank B. Lord, first; John D. Mothershed and C. E. Stewart, second; east and west, Keith Carlin and Mrs. John D. Mothershed, first, and Miss Betty Cochran and V. de Sveshnikoff, second.

Results of last week's duplicate at the invitational Little Bridge Club held at the home of Miss Betty Cochran, 2 Oxford street, Chevy Chase, Md., were, north and south, Mr. Stockvis and Mr. Shepard, first; Mr. Carlin and Mrs. Howard, second, and Mr. Watson and Miss Kenyon, third; east and west Mrs. Graham and Miss Griffith, first; Mr. Bassett and Miss Walker, second, and Mr. and Mrs. Brainard Warner, third.

Mrs. Martha Lemon, one of the frequent winners at the club, will assist in conducting the Olympic at the Kennedy-Warren. Members of the club, who are also members of the Mayfair Club, will play at the latter's headquarters in Stonleigh Court. Mr. Cochran will conduct the Olympic game at the Mayfair Club.

In a six-table game at 1641 R street, conducted by Mrs. Alma Bryne on Monday night, the winners were George C. Potter and Samuel Kemele, first, W. L. Crampton and Mrs. Kemele, second and Miss Martha King and Mrs. Sadie Harrison, third.

Winners at the Carlton seven-table duplicate, Howell movement, on Wednesday, conducted by Wessel Stewart, were Commander W. A. Corley, U. S. N. and Mrs. Helen Mariffjeren, first; Mrs. Dixie T. Wright and Dr. B. L. Naimen, second, and Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Chalmers, third. For the third time at the same place the latter pair scored third.

Winners at the Roosevelt duplicate conducted by Mrs. Eugene Nolan on Tuesday night were Capt. and Mrs. Charles Deitz, first; E. B. Martin and Charles Lyons, second; Mr. Compton and L. C. Sizer, third. The latter, who is manager of the hotel, after watching the season's play, decided to test his ability and came within one-half a point of capturing second prize.

The Octagon Bridge Club will conclude a successful and enjoyable season's play of 32 weeks on the night of April 26, when the final prizes in cash will be awarded those having made the highest scores. The members of the club have met on Wednesday evenings and played 24 boards at each session under an arrangement which enabled every player to have every other player as a partner at some time during the quarter. The members of the club are N. P. Arey, R. P. Cope, R. L. Hanson, Dr. W. E. Kelly, G. H. Laleger, D. L Myers, F V Sickler and R. L. Swenson.

The Little Slam Club will open on April 21 at the home of Mrs. Helen Riordan, 3315 Fourteenth street. There will be duplicate games every Friday evening and each afternoon the club will be open for rubber bridge. A cup will be awarded once a month to those who record top scores and a grand trophy will go to the season's best. Mrs. Riordan will manage the club.

McGoofey's First Reader

By H. I. PHILLIPS

Oh, see the worried little man. He looks very distracted.

The man's name is Will.

What is the matter with Will?

He is at his wit's end. He is afraid he has about run out of ideas, and when he runs out of ideas it means curtains.

Run out of ideas for what?

Ideas for new fronts for automobiles.

What has Will got to do with new fronts for automobiles?

Do automobiles need new fronts?

No, but they change them every season at least.

Why do they change the design of automobile fronts every season?

To make last year's car look old-fashioned.

Is it hard work thinking up new designs for automobile radiators?

It is when you have to get out something new every season so that a new car will not look like the one they designed last season.

It must be a great strain on the designers.

It is. Look at Will's face. Can you not see how worried he is?

Does Will regret choosing a career in an automobile designing department?

Yes, he now wishes he had taken something comparatively easy, like designing hats for women, or something.

HOARDING.

1. Today we will discuss hoarding, children.

2. A hoarder is a man who takes money out of a bank and puts it where he has a better chance of losing it.

3. Hoarding is the action of a person who feels easier when he thinks his money is where nearly anybody can find it.

4. Hoarding is the handmaiden of fear. A hoarder is a man who is so afraid his bank is weak that he shifts his money to a sock with a hole in both the toe and the heel.

5. Hoardings are of great help in restoring prosperity to the burglar industry. They make it possible for thieves to do big business with smaller tools.

6. You can not blame a man for wanting to protect his savings, but a clock, vase, sock, pillowcase, mattress or horse collar is no substitute for a good bank.

7. Are there any good banks? Yes, and the good ones are getting better all the time.

8. When a man takes his money out of a bank and hides it around the house he can not go to sleep because he is afraid he might forget where he put it himself.

9. This makes such a wreck of him that he generally decides to put the money back in the bank, where, if anything happens to it, he can blame somebody else.

10. Hoarding money is bad business and slows up recovery. We are speaking on the assumption there may be some people who still have some money.

11. People who hoard money are very loud in their criticism of loose banking methods so general during the boom years. But those who do the most squawking are very often the same fellows who used to denounce as old-fashioned any banker who wouldn't give them a loan on some bum security, and do it over the telephone.

12. So what?

13. So nothing. Maybe it was a mistake to bring the subject up.

ALPHABETICAL EXERCISES.

M is for maybe, a terrible word—
It makes any hope of quick action absurd.

N is for noodles, found in soup everywhere—
But if I don't find 'em, I really don't care.

O is for owl, by repute very wise,
But if one turned smart it would be a surprise.

A little tap dancing upstairs makes it fall.

Q is for quinine, a little round pill—
You take it when nobody knows why you're ill.

R is for robin; it says spring is here
But knows very well that it isn't, I fear.

A careful study of all phases of radio broadcasting by land grant colleges and State universities has been completed by Tracy F. Tyler, secretary and research director of the National Committee on Education by Radio. Mr. Tyler visited more than half of the 71 institutions engaged in radio activities.

The appraisal of the broadcasting work was made to determine the extent to which the educational institutions use the radio; the nature of the programs being broadcast by those institutions which use the radio; comparison between the types and costs of the equipment owned and used by institutions which have their own radio stations and those that use the facilities of commercial stations; the amount of money spent annually for broadcasting; the different types of organization which exist in the various institutions for administering radio service; the radio personnel required by an institution engaged in broadcasting; the opinions of the presidents, deans, extension directors and radio directors concerning the obectives of institutional broadcasting in the United States; the extent to which studies have been made by institutions of the effectiveness of their broadcasting in reaching the citizenry of their respective States, and so forth.

THE strangest story ever told over the radio was narrated by Maj. "Jimmy" Doolittle, speed flyer of the Army, who said that when he landed in a remote mining camp in a South American wilderness he was struck by the stoicism and courage of the Indians. "They play a game down there," said the major, "that represents the acme of thrillers. Twenty or 30 of them will gather in a circle. One will light a fuse two or three feet long that is attached to a half a stick of dynamite. They pass it from one to the other until it explodes. A widow or two results, but the tribe bows down to the courage of the survivors."

"N. B. C. is censoring lyrics containing any phrase or word which might be misconstrued through faulty pronunciation over the air," says Variety.

"Network asked Shapiro, Bernstein, publishing firm, to substitute for the word 'impunity' in the song, 'I Lay Me Down to Sleep,' on the theory that listeners might mistake it for 'impurity.'

"N. B. C. executives issuing the order doubted whether the average radio fan would know the meaning of 'impunity' anyway.

"Lyrics of 'Let There Be Love,' have been barred by N. B. C. and Columbia. Objection is that the words are similar in phraseology to the 'Let There Be Light' theme of the Bible and therefore the number might be considered sacrilegious by some listeners."

Culbertson on Bridge

By ELY CULBERTSON

FIVE-ODD in a major is usually the worst contract which can be reached on a hand. Contract experts, in general, recommend that the bidding should not go beyond four unless a contract of six is absolutely desirable. Even if the latter contract later proves to have been somewhat optimistic, there is always the chance of some advantageous lead or some slip in defense which will allow the Declarer to make the Slam. Failing this, there is always the possibility of the development of a squeeze or end-play which could not have been foreseen in the bidding.

However, hands with two Aces missing are not included in this category. Frequently, these hands contain such strong possibilities that it is impossible for the bidding to die at a contract of only four. In these cases one of the partners must decide that the Slam is impossible and that the more cowardly pass to the bid of five-odd will produce the best result.

In the following hand the South player, hearing his partner bid all the way up to five-odd practically by himself, was confronted with the problem of deciding (correctly, as it proved later) whether or not he should do more than pass:

North, Dealer.

♠ A K 10 6 4
♡ A J 8 6 5 2

♠ 9 8 3 N ♠ Q J 5

J 7 S 4 3
♣ Q 9 2 ♣ A K 6 3

♡ K Q 10 9
♣ J 8 7 5 4

The bidding: (Figures after bids in the table refer to numbered explanatory paragraphs.)

North	East	South	West
1♡(1)	Pass	2♡(2)	3◇(3)
4◇(4)	5◇(5)	Pass(6)	Pass
5♡(7)	Pass	Pass(8)	Pass

1—Preferring the six-card to the five-card suit. It was North's intention to later bid spades twice to show his 6-5 distribution, but this he was unable to do.

2—A minimum Raise, even though the trump support is very strong.

3—Even not vulnerable this was a rather dangerous bid. However, the necessity of giving his partner a lead was apparent to this player at the time.

4—A cue-bid, showing no losers in diamonds. Of course, a singleton was held, but this bid is frequently made to prevent the opponents from leading their own suit. Three spades would have been an alternate bid, but this would hardly have conveyed the playing strength of the hand. The King of trumps and the side Ace were the only cards which North felt he needed to fulfill the contract of six-odd.

5—Making the bidding still more difficult for the opponents.

6—Another Raise in hearts at this point would have conveyed the impression that the original Raise was very strong.

7—At this point North was forced to rebid. Having previously told an untruth about his diamond holding, he nevertheless could not decide to pass. He was still hoping for a six-bid from partner if the desired cards were held.

8—A very difficult decision to make, but a wise one. Even if it was believed that North held a void in diamonds, it was still possible that 2 club tricks or 1 club trick and 1 spade trick could be obtained by the opponents. The opponents had hindered the bidding so much that it was almost impossible to derive any real information as to North's actual holding. Undoubtedly, here the best course is to pass.

As will be seen, two tricks must be lost, although if the East player had believed North's bidding, six might have been made as two club leads would enable North to ruff, establish the spades and discard the two diamonds in Dummy on the two long spades in the North hand. Even this play is not very good as it requires the hearts to break 2-1 and the spades 3-3.

The problem of the opening lead is a source of worry to everybody. When partner has strongly bid a suit, it seems as though the choice is not so difficult, but even in this case there are times when the rule of preferring this lead to any other must be disregarded. This occurs on hands where it is almost certain that the opponents hold no more than one loser in that suit and possibly none.

The hand below was bid very strongly by East and West—in fact, it was decidedly overbid. Nevertheless, their ambitious contract would actually have been fulfilled if South had followed the time-honored tenet of opening the suit which his partner had bid.

East, Dealer.
North-South vulnerable.
East-West not vulnerable.

The bidding: (Figures after bids in table refer to numbered explanatory paragraphs.)

East	South	West	North
1◇(1)	Pass	1♡(2)	4♠(3)
Pass	Pass	5◇(4)	Pass(5)
Pass	5♠(6)	Pass(7)	Pass
6◇(8)	Pass	Pass	Pass

1—Obviously a psychic, although hand contains a great deal of playing strength.

2—Not quite enough to justify a forcing response.

3—An unusual bid, but probably the best one. It looks as though four spades can be made, while practically no defense is held against the opponents' possible contracts.

4—Showing strong support for partner's opening bid.

5—Some decision must be left to partner.

6—South is not absolutely sure as to the contracts that can be made and those that can be defeated. However, with three trumps for partner, a singleton and 1½ honor-tricks, the hand seems to demand some action.

7—A forcing pass.

8—East feels that the five-spade contract can probably be defeated. However, there is no certainty of this, and six diamonds can not possibly be set very much.

The only interest in the hand is due to the opening lead. If South had blindly opened a spade, the contract would have been made very easily, always provided East had guessed the diamond drop. The spade opening is a poor one compared with that of a club. South knows that no more than one spade trick is possible on East and West's bidding, and it is not at all unlikely that no spade tricks are available. Therefore the best chance of setting up tricks lies in a side suit, and clubs are better than hearts because of the fact that the latter suit has been bid by West. Hence the low club opening; and East is helpless, being unable to avoid the loss of one club and one heart.

The above opening lead is directly dependent on the time factor. It is obvious that the spade lead will cost no tricks, but it will allow Declarer one additional tempo and permit him to establish hearts before the club loser is uncovered.

Solution of Last Week's Problem.

You hold:

Spades	8 7 6
Hearts	Q 3
Diamonds	J 9 8 5
Clubs	J 7 5 3

Neither side is vulnerable. Both sides have 60 on the score. Your partner bids one heart and Second Hand passes. What do you do?

Answer—One notrump. This bid should be made, despite the fact that the hand contains only a little more than ½ honor-trick, in order to protect your partner in view of the score and, if your partner is weak, to make it difficult for the opponents to find a suit at which they can score game. You can not get so high on this hand, in view of the part-score, as to take a heavy penalty. There are many hands your partner may have which will be sufficient for you to go game in spite of your own weak hand

This Week's Problem.

This is one of a series of weekly problems in correct bidding. Today's problem is No. 15 of the series.

You hold:

Spades	Q 5 4
Hearts	A Q 9 7 2
Diamonds	Q J 6
Clubs	9 3

Both sides are vulnerable, no score. The Dealer bids one spade. You are Second Hand. What do you bid?

The answer to today's problem will be given next Sunday.

CAPITAL SOCIETY REJOICES AS ACTIVITY IS RENEWED FOR EASTERTIDE

Roosevelts Look Forward To Egg Rolling on Grounds

President's Grandchildren Will Participate in White House Festival Tomorrow; Attractive Kennel Show on Cards This Week.

By EVELYN PEYTON GORDON.

EASTER-TIME in Washington! One of the pleasantest things that happens. Cherry blossoms, green parks and crowds of smart people in the Easter morning parade. Flowers everywhere; in shop windows, in the gay little carts that line the streets giving them that festive and Parisian air. And with the lifting of the Lenten ban, Capital society, which has been lingering in Southern resorts, or living a quiet existence, once more takes a new lease on life and the gay whirl of Washington begins again.

The weeks between Easter and the summer exodus are filled with all manner of out-of-door entertainments; al fresco teas and dinners, garden parties, the National Capital Horse Show, the Maryland and Virginia Gold Cup races, and the Davis Cup tennis matches at the Chevy Chase Club.

Though the President and Mrs. Roosevelt have had guests galore since their coming to Washington, they now await with great interest the big event of the Easter season, egg rolling on the White House lawns, when thousands of children will gather under the blosoming magnolia trees in the spacious south grounds with their bunnies, chicks and baskets of eggs for the festive ritual of Easter morning.

Mrs. Roosevelt is entering enthusiastically into the preparations, as are her three small grandchildren, Sistie and Buzzie Dall, children of Mr. and Mrs. Curtis B. Dall, and baby William Donner Roosevelt, 4-month-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Elliott Roosevelt, who are guests in the White House. The First Lady herself will circulate among the host of young guests enjoying their pleasure in the annual treat.

The spring will be a busy time for the President and Mrs. Roosevelt. But they hope to take short cruises on the Presidential yacht, Sequoia, which is being put in readiness for week-end trips, and having visited the Rapidan camp, and found it a charming retreat, they will probably spend a number of their week-ends there.

Another feature of the spring which will attract much attention, will be the dog show of the Kennel Club, which will take place on Friday and Saturday in the Washington Auditorium. Mrs. Victor Alfaro, the former Miss Nancy Hamilton, daughter-in-law of the Minister of Panama and Senora de Alfaro, is among the most interested in the success of the event.

Mrs. Alfaro, a person of wide interests, has busied herself for several years with her rare collection of exotic fish, and her aquarium is one of the most interesting in Washington. Now she has further broadened her talents in the line of hobbies and finds her splendid chow, Miss Wu Li, a subject for concentrated interest these last few days before the show. The show this year will be the third held by the Kennel Club, which will be granted its charter and join the ranks of the National Kennel Clubs. The proceeds of the show, as usual, will go to a charity for crippled children sponsored by the Shriners.

On Saturday afternoon there will be a parade of the champions and earlier in the afternoon a children's class for the entries of owners not over 12 years of age.

Mrs. Albert Walker, who is interested in the class for cocker spaniels, will exhibit a brace of dogs, one of which, Maria, was the reserve winner at the recent Baltimore show. Mr. and Mrs. Walker bought the beautiful Maria just before the show, and are now the proud owners of one of the finest of the breed.

Mrs. Thomas R. Shipp plans to exhibit her chow, Ching, in the show, and Ching, who is already famous as the intrepid "bete noire" of Mrs. Roosevelt's police dog, Major, with whom he has had an encounter while taking his morning walk in Rock Creek Park, holds his aristocratic head high in the face of the imminent show.

A number of prominent Georgetown women will be hostesses at the open houses during the tour to be held by St. John's Church, Georgetown, Friday and Saturday. N street, Georgetown, was known as Gay street in 1800 when the City of Washington was being laid out. And Gay street was the social center of the prosperous Maryland port of Georgetown.

Three Gay street homes of that period will be open during the tour. No. 3038 N street, now the home of Maj. and Mrs. Henry Leonard, was built about 1800 and was for more than half a century the home and office of Dr. Joshua Riley, one of Georgetown's earliest physicians.

No. 3025 N street, now the residence of Mr. and Mrs. A. Blair Thaw, was built in 1795 and during a great part of its life was the home of Joseph Libbey, an early lumber merchant.

No. 3337 N street was built about 1790 by Mayor John Cox, who entertained Gen. Lafayette there at a magnificent dinner and reception in 1824.

The tourists will be helped in noting the characteristics and architectural distinctions of these houses, of an identical period in an identical section of an eighteenth century city, by the following hostesses as announced by Mrs. Theodore N. Gill, jr., general chairman of the tour committee; Mrs. Richard E. Babcock, Mrs. William A. Beall, Mrs. James Berrall, Mrs. Roswell H. Blair, Mrs. Basil D. Boteler, Mrs. Harold W. Burnside, Miss Elisa Darneille, Miss Lucy Dorsett, Miss Camille Du Bose, Mrs. Ronald S. Fisher, Mrs. John Blake Gordon, Mrs. John H. Hanna, Mrs. Harry B. Jordan, Mrs. Frank P. Leetch, Mrs. Louis Mackall, Miss Mary Marbury, Mrs. George L. Nicholson, Miss Winship, Mrs. Robert W. Woolley and Mrs. James Young.

A fourth open house is the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins at 1524 Twenty-eighth street, built in 1850 by Robert Perley Dodge, who with his father was a leader in the shipping industry that made Georgetown famous.

The tour will be held each afternoon. The buses will not only take the public to the opened houses, but also on an extended journey through the historic section of Georgetown, starting every half hour from 1 p. m. at Twenty-eighth and M streets.

Headed by Mr. William Phillips, Undersecretary of State, a committee of fourteen prominent Washingtonians has been formed to handle the sale of boxes for a contemplated series of three concerts to be given at Constitution Hall next winter by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, provided public interest in the series is evidenced.

Mr. Phillips, himself a trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was requested to form a Washington committee for boxes and acceptances have been received from Mrs. Robert Low Bacon, for a number of seasons chairman of the Washington committee of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, which has now withdrawn from the local field; Mrs. William R. Castle, jr., Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, sponsor of the famous Library of Congress chamber music concerts; Mrs. Bayard Cutting, Mrs. Frederic A. Delano, Mrs. Charles Evans Hughes, Mrs. Cordell Hull, Mrs. Frederic A. Keep, Mr. John Ellerton Lodge, Mrs. Adolph Caspar Miller, Mrs. David A. Reed, Mrs. Harlan F. Stone and Mrs. William H. Woodin.

The Boston Symphony authorities, in asking Mr. Phillips to head a Washington committee for boxes, made it clear that the plan for a Washington series is tentative and depends, in large measure, on the results of a canvas being made of local music lovers by Mrs. Dorothy Hodgkin Dorsey, its representative in the Capital.

The results of this canvass are expected to be made public shortly and in the meantime, the committee on boxes is proceeding with its task, most members of the committee hav-

A SEASON'S CLOSING SPOT MAY COME TO BE THE BEST

—By NELSON B. BELL—

FROM the point of view of Mr. Lee Shubert, it is no doubt regrettable that the ninth spring and summer season of the National Theater Players does not begin tomorrow evening, with his production of Edouard Bourdet's new play, "Best Seller," having its American premiere in some other theater as a competitive attraction.

As precedent and superstition go in the theater, this would be enough to insure the unequivocal success of the new play in which Peggy Wood, Ernest Truex, Ian Keith and numerous others of note are to be seen tomorrow evening, one week in advance of the advent of the Players to the same stage, for, if memory is permitted to revert exactly one year, it will be recalled that Rose Franken's "Another Language" was presented locally as one of the final offerings of an expiring season the week of April 18, 1932, in opposition to the inauguration of the National Players' eighth season, was largely ignored by the critics—not to mention a majority of the public, who remained away from it in vast multitudes—and went into New York April 25 to score one of the most emphatic hits of recent years.

It is, of course, now too late to arrange similar success insurance for "Best Seller," although the Bourdet play comes to the Capital for its American premiere no less an unknown quantity than was "Another Language"—unless the Paris verdict concerning its worth be taken at face value. Of late, America has not been placing "face value" on too many of France's promises!

* * * *

WITH "Best Seller," however, the case is somewhat different. Here is a play by an author who already has gained some foothold in this country as a playwright of great technical skill, delicacy and deftness in characterization and a shrewd command of incisive dialogue.

The fact that "The Captive," the first of the Bourdet plays to be seen in this country, exploded in a storm of controversy, and finally was withdrawn from American circulation, does not at all alter the fact that the play had had a brilliant run in Paris and had been hailed by all the critics of the French press as a sincere and profound story made up of legitimate material for presentation on the dramatic stage.

When Bourdet's second play to reach these shores, "The Sex Fable," was seen in Washington, and subsequently in New York, it became apparent that its author was no mere sensational scandal monger, interested in taboo subject-matter primarily as a sure source of exciting publicity, but, on the contrary, was an artist of discretion and originality who must be reckoned with in any contemplation of the best the modern theater is able to offer.

Now that his third play for American consumption is about to be disclosed, and since it is heralded as a work which more than fulfills the rich promise of its two predecessors, it seems pertinent to recall some of the salient facts of Mons. Bourdet's distinguished, but by no mean mushroom, career.

* * * *

EDOUARD BOURDET, then, is in the neighborhood of 45, Anglo-Saxon in appearance and anything but that in temperament. His sole interest from the very beginning of his career has been, and still is, the theater. His father was a well-to-do merchant who had high ambitions for his son. He was to become a banker.

His son, as a matter of fact, did agree to study banking and made a perfunctory beginning, but managed to spend most of the period of his novitiate writing dramatic pieces, solely for his own amusement.

Finally, he decided that one of his plays was good enough for a public performance, and so, in 1910, "Le Rubicon" was presented at the Theater Michel, where it achieved a moderate success.

Then the war intervened and four years in the infantry was the new career for Mr. Bourdet—four years of war, a decoration for valor, under fire, and three wounds. There followed some newspaper work as London correspondent for a French newspaper. Then Mons. Bourdet retired to the provinces and spent two solid years dramatizing the idea behind "The Captive."

The plays that followed revealed a refreshing ability to take a conventional theme, more or less, and make it sparkle. And it has ever been that way with those of Mons. Bourdet's plays with which America is familiar.

The American theatergoer, furthermore, has found in Bourdet a man who can interpret our postwar philosophy understandingly, and, perhaps, with some bitterness, but withal truthfully and amusingly, possibly, the times being what they are, the most important consideration of all.

* * * *

SO it seems that there bids fair to grow up about the City of Washington a tradition that will center in the season's last plays.

We have already touched briefly upon the happy experience of "Another Language" in launching itself along the shores of the Potomac as a dying season gasped its last. It is not too optimistic to imagine that history may repeat itself in this backward spring of 1933.

This new play, "Best Seller," to be sure, has Paris as its locale. But since it is a commentary on French publishing methods—laid bare with a keen and biting humor—it is not too much to suppose that it might turn out to be, also, an illuminating commentary on American publishing methods, as well. For wherever there are prizes awarded for literary merit, there will always be a certain amount of friendly log-rolling done to harvest the reward.

It has been made reasonably certain, at any rate, that America's publishing world is looking with rather more than casual interest

Bette Davis Rises To Height of Star In Modern Romance

The charming personality of Bette Davis has never been more fully revealed than in "Ex-Lady," her first starring vehicle for Warner Bros., the current screen attraction at Warner Bros.' Earle Theater. Dorothy Stone, dancing daughter of Fred Stone, famous comedian, headlines the stage bill, which also includes Rae Samuels, Garner. Wolf and Hakins, Mary Palmer and Pony Boy and Maxine Doyle.

In "Ex-Lady," the manners and morale of New York's artistic set are depicted in all the modernity of today's and tomorrow's ideas, rather than borrowing on the material of yesterday.

In the title role, Miss Davis enacts the part of a modern girl, frank and sincere, who wants romance but not marriage.

The struggle between today's and yesterday's ideas and codes, and their conflict with the careers of the young people provide some unusual mix-ups and a spicy plot that provides intriguing material for the vivacious new star. The story is set against the background of New York's artist colony with its colorful Bohemian atmosphere, and it shifts in sequence to casinos and night clubs in Havana. Contrast of locale is added to contrast of types and ideas, thus providing moving brilliance to this picture.

A finely cast group of players appear in support of Bette Davis. Important parts are played by Gene Raymond, Frank McHugh, Monroe Owsley, Claire Dodd, Kay Strozzi, Ferdinand Gottschalk, Alphonse Ethier and Bodil Rosing.

Dorothy Stone, daughter of the famous Fred Stone, headlines the stage program. She will be remembered as the costar with Fred Stone, in "Ripples" and "Stepping Stones," and with Will Rogers in "Three Cheers." For her vaudeville turn she presents a pot-pourri of dances, in which she is assisted by Charles Collins.

The program will be completed by short-reel subjects, the McNamee Newsreel and the Earle Orchestral prelude.

A Notable Cast in Tangled Love Tale Columbia's Feature

Ralph Morgan, Alexander Kirkland, "Boots" Mallory and Irene Ware are carrying the leading roles in the Fox Films romantic feature, "Humanity," which opens tomorrow at Loew's Columbia Theater.

"Humanity" was directed by John Francis Dillon, who directed Clara Bow in "Call Her Savage." Others in the cast are Noel Madison, Christian Rub and Ferike Boros.

Morgan enacts the role of the doctor-father of Kirkland, who carries the love interest with "Boots" Mallory, portraying the role of Morgan's nurse. Irene Ware is the society girl who tries to capture the love of Kirkland, which she met abroad while he was studying to carry on the practice of his father.

The story embraces the elements of romance and sacrifice as it depicts the adventures of a young doctor who is blind to the ideals of his father and who follows the lure of money because of his infatuation with a luxury-loving woman.

Miss Mallory's previous success was "Handle With Care," in which she was costarred with James Dunn. Kirkland was widely acclaimed for his recent performance in "Strange Interlude," in which Ralph Morgan was also starred.

FAMOUS DICKENS PLAY HAS SCREEN REBIRTH IN SOUND

CHARLES DICKENS' immortal classic, "Oliver Twist," is heard for the first time on the screen at Warner Bros.' Metropolitan Theater, where it is the featured attraction of the Easter week program. Little Dickie Moore, filmdom's famous child star, has the title role in the part of Oliver Twist.

So familiar is the story to the vast army of theatergoers that it is scarcely necessary to go into detail concerning it. Briefly, it concerns the adventures of a young orphan, Oliver Twist, in the heartless metropolis of London. The boy, penniless and unversed in the ways of the city, falls in with a gang of crooks. How he is trained to be a pickpocket, fails to make good, is rescued by a benevolent gentleman and climbs at last into an atmosphere of respectability and affluence, supplies the main thread of the story.

Clever little Dickie Moore will be seen as Oliver Twist. Simple, appealing and childish, he will win all hearts. Brutal Bill Sykes is played by William Boyd; Irving Pichel plays Fagin; Doris Lloyd is Nancy ykes; Alec B. Francis is Brownlow; Lionel Belmore is Bumble; George K. Arthur is Toby Crackit, and many others of note are prominently cast.

Bing Crosby is seen on the supporting program in his latest Paramount comedy, "Sing, Bing, Sing," and the program is completed by the latest issue of the Paramount Sound News.

Dickie Moore is probably the most modest screen star in the world today. Although he has basked in the limelight since the tender age of 11 months, he is as simple and unaffected as any kindergarten youngster and as democratic in his tastes.

Far from taking his screen success seriously, he has no ambition to be an actor when he grows up. His earliest ideas for a future career were to become a garbage man, so that he could wear white gloves! But now he has developed an intense desire to become a traffic policeman.

A NEW MUSICAL TECHNIQUE REVEALED IN RADIO FILM

WASHINGTON is having a rare opportunity this week to see the great international success, "Be Mine Tonight," which has been hailed as the picture that ushers in a new era and technique in musical screen productions.

Rodney Collier, manager of the Rialto Theater, has brought the film to the Capital for its first showing, and audiences that attended the gala Hollywood opening found "Be Mine Tonight" all that advance publicity said it would be.

Directed by Anatole Litwak, the Russian, the production doesn't star a single screen luminary. Rather does it star itself, for it is notable for its ensemble effects, its clear-cut entity, its perfect unity of scene, character, setting and melody. Melody plays an integral part in the making of "Be Mine Tonight's" success, a part that one realizes only in a sly, subtle way when witnessing the picture, for it is adroitly interwoven with the entire action.

Kiepura, the great Polish singer; Sonnie Hale, the English comedian; Magda Schneider, the German beauty, and Edmund Gwenn, Athene Seyler, Betty Chester and Aubrey Mather are in the international cast. "Tell Me Tonight" is its musical theme, but the rest of its score is elaborate and delightful, so much so that critics have called it the best-balanced and most enchanting musical setting any picture has ever had.

Compared to "Be Mine Tonight," the past musical films fade into insignificance.

Gala Bill Greets Joyous Easter on Screen and Stage

Easter tidings to Mr. and Mrs. Washington and the visitors to the Nation's Capital from the Loew's Fox Theater, which is presenting one of the most elaborate stage and screen offerings ever to be seen in any theater in Washington.

The screen attraction is Lionel Barrymore, whose most recent picture is "Rasputin and the Empress," in the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer dramatization of the famous London stage success, "Looking Forward." The stage performance is headlined by Isham Jones and his orchestra, with the capable assistance of Ben Alley. Al Trahan is being featured as an extra added attraction.

"Looking Forward" has, besides Lionel Barrymore, an outstanding cast of stars, including the most important roles, Lewis Stone, of "Men Must Fight," "Mata Hari" and many others; Elizabeth Allen, famous English stage and screen star; Benita Hume, also from London and recently in "Clear All Wires," and Phillips Holmes, of "An American Tragedy" and more recently "Secrets of Madame Blanche." Clarence Brown directed this production.

Two men and their wives supply the foundation of the story. The two men are employer and employe of a large department store in London. The wife of the merchant prince is untrue to him, while the wife of the employe, an old accountant, stands by the husband and raises him to a new manhood when he has lost faith and is in despair.

Among the dramatic highlights are the conflict between the unfaithful wife and the faithful daughter; the scene where the rich man's family learns that ruin is imminent; the discharging of the faithful old accountant on account of financial difficulties, and his fight to rehabilitate himself; the rallying of the children to their father in trouble, and the amazing dramatic climax in which the old bookkeeper saves the store from being "gobbled" by a chain organization.

Isham Jones and his Columbia Broadcasting orchestra, who are more commonly known as "The Aristocrats of Rhythm," with Ben Alley, also of broadcasting fame, offer their versatile talents across the footlights this week, with France and La Peel opening the stage program, two acrobats in "Up in the Air." George Weist and Ray Stanton are setting the pace in song and dance in a "Little Rhythm and Less Reason." The internationally known comedian, Al Trahan, "The American Paderoughski," with the able assistance of Lady Yukona Cameron, "The Famous Viennese Soprano," is clowning on the stage in his own inimitable way; a way that no one has been able to duplicate.

Army Supports.

Two hundred and ten behind-the-lines workers are required to keep one motion picture star in the trenches or provide grist for one camera. This is indicated at Paramount studios in Hollywood, where 55 cameras are maintained and where an average of 1,200 workers are employed to keep approximately that number of featured players busy. This camera equipment represents an investment of $330,000. Each instrument has the approximate value of an expensive foreign automobile.

In the Blood.

Ruth Selwyn, one of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's promising young actresses, once produced a musical comedy on Broadway.

Lionel Barrymore An Industrialist In Powerful Film

In a new character creation, in contrast to his previous pictures, Lionel Barrymore is currently being presented at RKO-Keith's in the Radio Pictures' production of "Sweepings." Executives of the producing company selected the Lester Cohen novel, "Sweepings," because of the opportunity it offered to present Mr. Barrymore in a character entirely foreign to those in preceding pictures.

"Sweepings" tells of the rise and fall of a great American mercantile family. Left a widower with a large brood of small children, Daniel Pardway (Mr. Barrymore) goes to work to build up a great commercial empire for them. At the end of his life he finds them unworthy and without the slightest desire to accept the responsibility of that which their father had created for them. The final solution of the story presents a dramatic scene, dominated by the star, that has seldom, if ever, been equaled upon the stage or screen.

The Keith program also includes a new comedy featuring Eugene Palette, an Easter cartoon, "Bonnets and Bunnies;" "Ship of Dreams," featuring the radio tenor, "The Dream Singer," and the Pathe News.

Among the ashes of Chicago, still smoldering after the fire of 1871, a man of courage and vision founded a business. The growth of that business and of his family is the story of "Sweepings."

Though "Sweepings" was actually photographed in three months, its making required one year, due to the great mass of preproduction tasks. Months of historic research in close collaboration with the Chicago Historical Society went into the picture. Hundreds of photographs and eyewitness stories about the great fire were collected by the studio, as well as scores of pieces of antique furniture and household appliances.

"Supernatural."

With the signing this week of Willard Robertson, "Skippy's" father, the cast of Paramount's "Supernatural" was completed. Robertson joins a list of players including Carole Lombard, Allan Dinehart, Vivienne Osborne, Randolph Scott, H. B. Warner, Beryl Mercer, William Farnum, George Burr MacAnnan and Lyman Williams. Victor Halperin is directing.

Easily.

The most attractive newcomer to pictures is "42nd Street-Gold Diggers of 1933" Ruby Keeler. Excuse, please. The former Ruby Keeler. She's now Mrs. Al Jolson.

Poignant Romance Modernized for a Pair of Favorites

Loew's Palace Theater is offering as its current attraction the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, heralded as one of the most ambitious pictures of the year, of "The White Sister," with Helen Hayes and Clark Gable costarred for the first time.

The picture was adapted by Donald Ogden Stewart from the famous F. Marion Crawford novel and the Walter Hacket dramatization and was directed by Victor Fleming, whose most recent talkie effort was the Gable-Harlow success, "Red Dust."

Miss Hayes, who recently scored an outstanding portrayal in "A Farewell to Arms," plays the part of Angela Chiaromonte, daughter of an Italian prince, in "The White Sister." Gable, whose most recent film appearances were in "Strange Interlude" and "No Man of Her Own," has the role of Giovanni Severi, a lieutenant in the Italian army. The part of Angela's father is enacted by Lewis Stone, and other important roles are filled by Louise Closser Hale, May Robson, Edward Arnold and Alan Edwards.

"The White Sister," termed the most stirring and poignant love story in the history of fiction, was selected by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer as an ideal vehicle for the costarring talents of Helen Hayes and Clark Gable. The period of the story was modernized to that of the World War, with aerial bombardments and the conflict over the Italian Alps taking the place of the more luridly melodramatic volcanic eruption of the original narrative. The picture's Italian backgrounds are said to be among the most artistic ever constructed at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios.

Listed as highlights of "The White Sister" are the decision of Angela to break away from the sheltered life she has been living, to engage in a love affair with Giovanni, the young Italian officer; the tragic death of Angela's father in an automobile accident while trying to stop her from meeting Giovanni; the young officer's summons to the front just as he and Angela are about to be married; Angela's tragic resignation on hearing a report of the death of her lover in action; her entrance into a convent in an attempt to forget the past; the sensational return of Giovanni from a prison camp and his frantic attempts to get Angela to break her vows, and the final spectacular air raid, in which Giovanni performs an act of heroism in an effort to protect Angela's convent from bombardment.

Charlie Chase is in another of his many hilarious comedies as the leading added attraction, "Silent Racket." A cartoon, "Oh, Susanna," and the Hearst Metrotone News complete the program.

A New Play by Bourdet Closes Legitimate Season

Play From French Makes Merry With Book Sale Racket

This week at the National Theater Lee Shubert will offer Peggy Wood and Ernest Truex in a new play by Edouard Bourdet entitled "Best Seller." Ian Keith and George Coulouris are featured. Others in the cast are Ralph Locke, Frederick Voight, Edgar Barrier, Roman Bohnen, Joseph Allenton, John Adair, Philip Jones and Hildur Ouse.

The adaptation has been made by Dorothy Cheston Bennett (Mrs. Arnold Bennett), who saw the play abroad when it was first done in Paris. So much attention did the play attract that several authors turned to the work of translating and arranging it for the English stage; likewise several producers were in the market for the rights. Lee Shubert was the fortunate one, and it is under his sponsorship that the play comes to Washington, then Brooklyn and, finally, New York. F. Cowles Strickland has staged the play.

Incidentally, "Best Seller" will be the sixth and last of the present season's plays to come to this city under the patronage of the American Theater Society. It was with some timidity that reference has been made to the fact that M. Bourdet, the author of "Best Seller" is also the author of "The Captive," which, when produced a few years ago, excited theatergoers as nothing has done in years. Now "Best Seller," except for its almost perfect construction, originality of plot and literate dialogue, is far removed from the other play. "Best Seller" is pure comedy. It was not written for a blush. There is nothing about it that has to be spoken of in whispers, and yet it has the same element of surprise, the same tenseness of situation, that Bourdet gave to "The Captive."

He might be recalled also as the author of "The Sex Fable." It has remained for the presentation of "Best Seller" to place him in the front rank of French authors. Already famous, he has added to his stature by writing a mature piece of stage literature that is sure to bring him fine recompense from its production in this country, with a cast that Mr. Shubert is proud to call "his best effort."

The comedy exposes the literary racket of both publishers and authors. The title is apt and, perhaps, obvious. It fits the story perfectly. To those who are sometimes caught in the fever of excitement over "best sellers" it will strike a familiar note. Bourdet knows his publishers; he also knows his writers. He pokes fun at the whole tribe and, while doing so, gives the audience a thrilling evening, because his story stands as a shining example of perfect play construction. Here, then, is a production that can not be passed over lightly as just "another play." It has come to America with a reputation earned after a season in Paris. The adaptation has added to its importance while in no way destroying its French flavor.

"Rigoletto" to Be Sung by All-Star Group at Belasco

Nino Martini, the tenor who possesses the most beautiful voice since Caruso, will be among the big opera stars appearing here with the Chicago Opera Company at the Belasco Theater Sunday evening, April 23.

In an effort to popularize grand opera at popular prices, Maestro Salmaggi, director of the company, is bringing Nino Martini and many other internationally known singers for the perfermace of "Rigoletto."

Nino Martini has sung operatic roles all over Italy, and became famous in this country when the Columbia Broadcasting System engaged him for a special program, in which he appears each Wednesday and Friday evenings. Nino Martini not only possesses a beautiful voice, but he is a talented actor as well.

With Nino Martini in this gala performance, Washingtonians will also hear Maria Serrano, sensational coloratura soprano, who has just returned from Italy; Lillian Marchetto, who has a beautiful contralto voice; Joseph Royer, world-renowned barytone, and Nino Ruisi, bass.

Maestro Salmaggi will bring from New York, orchestra, chorus and ballet selected from the forces of the Metropolitan Opera, with gorgeous costumes and original scenery.

AT THE PLAY IN NEW YORK

By MARK BARRON.

NEW YORK, April 15 (A.P.).—Bernard Shaw did not leave a new play behind on his brief visit to New York, but he has written one which will be finished by the time he arrives in London. However, it is a drama to be published, not to be acted.

This came as a disappointment to the Theater Guild, which has presented 14 of his plays in America, four of them for their world premieres. It was known that he was writing a new drama during his trip around the world, and it was expected that when he arrived here he would leave behind the completed manuscript for the guild's first production in the fall. But it is learned that this new work is for the library only.

During his day in New York Shaw did visit the Guild Theater, where most of his plays have been acted. After curiously examining all the electrical equipment, he strolled to the center of the stage and began singing, "Ah-ah-ah-ah," going through the scale. Then turning, he remarked, "There is no echo."

SINCE his play, "The Captive," was accorded enthusiastic critical acclaim when it was presented here in 1926, Edouard Bourdet has been a playwright from whom Broadway has long expected another excellent drama. At last it has arrived and begins its out-of-town tour Monday night in Washington. (Ed. note: As if we hadn't heard!).

The play is "Best Seller," and it has Peggy Wood and Ernest Truex as costars. Miss Wood just closed here in "A Saturday Night," which marked her return to Broadway after several years of stardom in London.

THREE new plays are scheduled for Broadway premieres during the week of April 24. The first of these is a drama about a boy's reformatory, entitled "Little Ol' Boy." Its principal players are Ara Gerald and John Drew Colt, son of Ethel Barrymore.

The other two arrivals are "It Happened Tomorrow," which its authors, Leo Levy and Frank Marcus, describe as "a prophetic comedy," and "Baby Business," a farce by Earl McLellan and Eugene Sanger.

W. SOMERSET MAUGHAM will be represented in two theaters on Broadway this spring. His latest play, "For Services Rendered," opened this week and on May 8 the first-nighters will see one of his adaptations.

This latter is his version of Luigi Chiapelli's Italian play, "The Mask and the Face." It is being produced by the Theater Guild with Laura Straub and Humphrey Bogart in the leading roles. Philip Moeller is directing.

Another newspaper play is coming to town soon. This is "Man Bites Dog," with Dennie Moore in the leading role and with Theron Bamberger as producer.

Mons. Chevalier Is Not So Sure About The Lure of Charm

Maurice Chevalier herewith explains his recent bald and bold comment that "most women make too great an effort to be charming."

"American women are the chief offenders," declares the star of Paramount's "A Bedtime Story." "Continental and English hostesses know the pleasant trick of permitting guests to devise and enjoy their own particular entertainment. By this I most certainly do not mean all American women. In this country there are many gracious hostesses. But there are many, too, who try to dominate their guests.

"Women, as a group, also are too determined to be feminine. Particularly, young girls do not realize that real charm is the charm of reserve, quiet dignity, and beauty suggested rather than inflicted.

"Not one woman in 50 knows the true art of makeup. Feminine lips are too vivid, cheeks are too ghastly, and eyes—what crimes are committed upon them!

"All of this comes under the head of efforts to be charming. If women would make as great an effort in the opposite direction they would find themselves admired by a new race of gallant and chivalrous men. I am convinced that charm does not result from effort, however. It takes effort to be unnatural. If women would be themselves and cease trying to outdo one another in dress, use of cosmetics and social conquests, we could not resist them."

Opera Festival Is Being Observed in City of Baltimore

The Opera Festival announced in these columns last Sunday starts tomorrow evening at the Maryland Theater in Baltimore with "Rigoletto," in which a young American coloratura soprano, Mary Moore, is presented as a sensational surprise to the musical world. She is said to reach the highest notes of any living singer.

On Tuesday evening, "Faust;" Wednesday evening, a young Baltimore society matron, Harriet Colston (daughter of Mrs. W. W. Abell) will make her debut on the operatic stage in "La Boheme;" Thursday evening, "Lucia;" Friday evening, "Carmen," with Janet Adamson, and on Saturday, "Cavalleria" and "Pagliacci" for the matinee, and "Tosca" in the evening.

Many Washingtonians have made reservations.

A Drawer of Lost Illusions at the Paramount Studio

A drawer filled with wedding rings and representing more tragedy, lost hopes and broken loves than many volumes of fiction was discovered at the Paramount Studio by Louise Dresser while she was selecting a ring to be worn in "Song of the Eagle."

This drawer in the wardrobe department contains many hundreds of wedding bands which have been accumulated for 15 years, as well as other rings of all types and vogues dating back to 1800.

"Pawn shops have been our best source of supply for these properties," said Frank Richardson, head of the wardrobe department. "We have learned only a few of the bitter stories connected with them."

One of the most novel rings in the collection was chosen for Miss Dresser to wear. It is a "hair-laced" affair of the date of 1875. Hairstrands of the bride-to-be are woven into the gold band.

Lion Man.

Elated with his work as the lion man in "King of the Jungle," Paramount has taken up its option on Buster Crabbe by signing the Olympic swimming champion to a long-term contract. Crabbe's next role has not yet been assigned, but he is being considered for a part in "College Humor," the cast of which already includes Bing Crosby, Jack Oakie, Frances Dee, Randolph Scott and Burns and Allen.

Boston Orchestra Sounds Sentiment Regarding Series

A series of three matinee concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, at Constitution Hall, may be one of the musical treats in store for Washington next winter, according to an announcement by Dorothy Hodgkin Dorsey, local representative of the orchestra, with headquarters at Droop's, 1300 G street northwest.

During the past week, Mrs. Dorsey made a preliminary canvass of thousands of Washington music-lovers in an effort to ascertain their reaction to the plan to bring the Boston Symphony here next winter. In addition, she reported to Dr. Koussevitzky that a committee of fourteen Washingtonians, headed by Undersecretary of State Phillips, had voluntarily undertaken the work of subscribing for the 52 available boxes in the big D. A. R. auditorium.

This committee, incidentally, includes such prominent Washington women as Mrs. Robert Low Bacon, for a number of seasons chairman of the Washington committee of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony concerts; Mrs. William R. Castle, jr., Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, sponsor of the famous chamber of music concerts at the Library of Congress; Mrs. Bayard Cutting, Mrs. F. A. Delano, Mrs. Charles Evans Hughes, Mrs. Cordell Hull, Mrs. Frederick A. Keep, Mr. John Ellerton Lodge, Mrs. Adolph C. Miller, Mrs. David A. Reed, Mrs. Harlan F. Stone and Mrs. William H. Woodin.

Dr. Koussevitzky, who comes to Washington on Monday evening, April 24, to conduct a portion of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at one of the performances of the annual Library of Congress chamber music festival, has tentatively reserved Constitution Hall for Wednesday afternoon, November 15; Tuesday afternoon, January 30, and Wednesday afternoon, April 4. He plans to start his concerts at 4:40 p. m., and a price scale of $3, $4, $5, $7 and $9 has been adopted, with boxes at $50. No Government tax will be charged on these seats.

The Boston Symphony's local representative, Mrs. Dorsey, made it clear in her announcement that while the Boston Symphony is desirous of including a Washington series in its 1933-34 itinerary, the contemplated series depends entirely upon the amount of advance subscriptions received during the current month, though payment on such subscriptions need not be made before October 1. Already, ten of the Constitution Hall boxes have been subscribed.

SEASON'S CLOSING SPOT

to the first performance of "Best Seller" in the United States in the National tomorrow night.

But to get back to the possible prestige that may come to be attached to each season's final gesture, it is perhaps no more than scriptural fulfillment that, as was the case in 1932, "the last shall be first."

* * * *

IN being able to close the record on another season of regularly booked touring attractions, without at the same time being compelled to bid a long adieu to the worthy performance of arresting works of the living theater, Washington is among the few fortunate cities in these United States.

The announcement of the "little season" of the National Theater Players, following without interruption "Best Seller's" premiere-finale of the major season of 1932-33, insures a continuation well into the summer of theatrical fare that will compare favorably with the best the traveling troupes have been able to afford.

This statement reflects neither clairvoyance nor guesswork, because the National Theater Players, as this season constituted, are a known quantity. The personnel of the company is one upon which local theater goers long since have placed the stamp of their complete approval and the symbol of their warm affection. The Players' individual and collective abilities have been proved. The selection of plays, insofar as those selections have been made known, are interesting and sagacious.

All that remains is to await the coming of Monday night, April 24.

* * * *

THERE is not another stock company in the country, it is safe to say, that can boast the distinguished clientele that the National Theater Players have attracted during the span of their existence, which now approaches so closely to a rounded decade.

During this time, four who have been hailed as First Ladies of the Land have been enthusiastic patrons of this popular organization—Mrs. William Howard Taft, Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, Mrs. Calvin Coolidge and Mrs. Herbert Hoover.

Probably the most enthusiastic of these was Mrs. Coolidge, who first attended a Wednesday matinee performance on short notice to the management, when seats were at a premium—thus launching the first gray hairs that are slowly creeping into Mr. Cochran's throbbing temples—and was so charmed by that performance that thereafter she became a regular subscriber for the season.

Only the President's summer outing in the Black Hills interrupted Mrs. Coolidge's summer-long attendance at the National. But even that did not interfere with her participation in the company's final farewell when the last week of the "little season" finally was reached.

At that last Wednesday matinee, sensing that speechmaking and an exchange of pleasantries across the footlights was to follow the final curtain, Mrs. Coolidge restrained her Secret Service escort from a precipitate departure at the end of the last act and remained in her place while each member of the company delivered his or her "good-by" to the friends out front.

This is not to say that other First Ladies have not enjoyed the sterling work of the National Players quite as much as Mrs. Coolidge, but it is to say that opportunity on one occasion made it possible for her to express her appreciation of their efforts a little beyond the rest.

With an eager and enthusiastic enjoyment of the theater once more resident in the Executive Mansion it is not, perhaps, too visionary to suspect that the forthcoming season of the admirable group under Mr. Clifford Brooke's direction again will attract the interest and win the favor of the members of the President's household.

If such should prove to be the case, they will be handsomely entertained by a band of gifted and earnest artists.

* * * *

IF these scattered Easter Day remarks have seemed to ignore the excellence of the screen fare that is spread before the amusement seekers of the Capital by the cathedrals of the cinema, it is only because a certain importance attaches to the writing off of another full season of the drama in the National Capital. In a spirit of "hail and farewell" one contemplates the months that are gone with grateful respect and looks forward to another year with the joyous hope that Easter itself is enough to inspire in every human heart

It should be noted, nevertheless that this is a week of surpassing excellence in the motion picture houses. It is impossible, this week, to choose an unworthy picture to view. There are no unworthy pictures on view this week. All of our screens are genuinely exalted.

May their shadows never grow less!

COMING TO LOCAL STAGES

UNDER the direction of Clifford Brooke, the National Theater Players will inaugurate their ninth annual season next Monday night at the National Theater.

The opening play will be the John Golden New York comedy-mystery, "Riddle Me This."

In this play a new turn is given to the usual mystery story by letting the audience "in on it" at the start and having the central character in the play not only riddle the cast but, in the end, riddle the audience for the real solution.

As in all mystery plays, the answer can not be given in advance.

In their opening of what has been affectionately termed by one of the local drama editors as "the National's little season," the entire cast that made up last year's company will try to "riddle me this." Leona Powers, Donald Woods, Kathryn Givney, Romaine Callender, Adelaide Hibbard, Burke Clarke, Forrest Orr, Karl Nielson and Frank Peck will be called on to take their welcome home bows.

CONTINUING the line of road attractions newly organized and sent on tour by the Empire Burlesque Circuit, Manager Jimmie Lake, of the Gayety, next week will present another company of new faces, beginning with the customary matinee performance on Sunday, April 23.

The cream of the crop of burlesque comics, a lively chorus of 18, singers, dancers and "display artistes," all are promised in abundant measure for next week's production.

Matinees will be given daily and smoking will, as always, be permitted in all parts of the house.

MISS WEST "YESSED" INTO STARDOM, HER CONTENTION

Blonde Mae West says she became a star because she had her own way—her director said "yes" and "yes" and "yes." And she swaggers, she asserts, because she just had to attract attention to herself some way. That was years ago.

By HUBBARD KEAVY.

HOLLYWOOD—Mae West says she was "yessed" into stardom.

"I know what they say about 'yes men' in Hollywood," said Mae, "but I don't feel unkindly toward their breed at all. It was this way: I was going on my own, and I needed a director.

"Well, a guy who'd had a lot of successes was recommended to me and I hired him. I didn't know that every show he'd had anything to do with in late years was a flop. They flopped, I guess, because he was out of ideas. So he never made a suggestion.

"He just 'yessed' me, allowed me to express myself the way I wanted to. I think that had I had any other director, he'd have suggested ways of acting that might have altered my style or completely changed my performance.

"The play was a 'wow,' due in a great measure, I believe, to the fact that I got what I needed—yessing."

Mae also told why the famous West swagger was developed. That swagger is a definite part of her unusual personality. Years ago, before she was a star, she says, she often was cast in a play with "about 40 comics."

She used to lose sleep trying to think up some way to draw attention to herself before she delivered her lines. Audiences usually watched comedians until Mae got well into her speeches, which detracted from what she had to say.

"I'll walk unlike anyone else," decided Mae. The walk worked.

Just back to begin her third movie, Mae was wearing none of her diamonds. Nor any other jewelry. She had on a full-length fitch coat, over a brown silk crepe dress. Her nails seemed to have a pearly polish which made them look silvery when the sunlight hit them. She wore a small gray hat.

Gayety Attraction Holds Out Lure of Femininity and Fun

When there are so many good reports about a burlesk and vaudeville show, surely there is suficient reason to accept the verdict on its own strength.

"Sugar Babies," one of the newest attractions on the Empire Circuit, may confidently be expected to provide worthy entertainment at the Gayety Theatre this week, starting with the regular matinee today. It is made up of up-to-date orgies of fun, dished out by Joe Freed, Lew White and Jim Coughlin, a trio of comics whose joint efforts cause gales of laughter.

Matinees will be given daily. Smoking is allowed in all parts of the house. Prices of admission are reasonable.

The Philadelphia Symphony Will Be Heard Four Times

Announcement comes from the T. Arthur Smith Concert Bureau outlining plans for the season of four Tuesday evening concerts by the Philadelphia Orchestra.

The famous and popular conductor, Leopold Stokowski, will conduct at least two of the four concerts. This famous organization is now in its thirty-fourth season and many fine programs are being arranged for the coming season by Mr. Stokowski.

Season subscriptions are now being received at T. Arthur Smith Concert Bureau. Old subscribers should file their renewals or requests for change in location as soon as possible as new subscribers will be alloted locations on May 15.

The opening concert by the Philadelphia Orchestra will be on Tuesday evening, October 17. The subsequent dates are November 21, December 19 and February 13. All concerts will be at Constitution Hall.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

By ELISABETH E. POE.

ALLELUIA! The choirs of Washington chant today and the city answers antiphonally with the historic greeting of the day. Throughout the entire church group, of whatever branch of the Christian faith, the day is symbolized with special musical programs. Organists, choirmasters and singers have given long hours of preparation to the programs and there is every cause to be proud of the showing.

The International Art Forum, Mme. Amelia Conti, president, announces a violin recital to be rendered by the famous Argentine violinist, Remo Bolognini, at the Carlton Hotel, Sunday, April 30, at 4 o'clock. The recital is under patronage of Dr. Felipe A. Espil, Ambassador of Argentina. This will be the first appearance of Mr. Bolognini in Washington as a soloist. He has, however, appeared here many times in his present position of assistant concert master of the New York Philharmonic Symphony.

The above recital will be followed on May 7 by another recital, also at the Carlton Hotel, at 4 o'clock, presenting Blanca Renard, Chilean pianist, and Lavinia Darve, lyric soprano, in joint recital. These programs are in keeping with the Art Forum's aim of fostering Latin-American art and artists in the United States.

A concert will be given at the University Club on Tuesday, at 8:30 p. m., by Felian Garzia, pianist, and Francis Garzia, cellist and violinist. On the program will be the following numbers:

Violin soli—Air on the G String (Bach), "Legende" (Wieniawski), "Meditation" (Francis Garzia), Francis Garzia. Piano soli—Prelude in F Sharp (Chopin), Prelude in E Flat (Chopin), Prelude in D Minor (Chopin), Felian Garzia. Cello soli—"Sarabande" (Bach), "Berceuse" (Faure), Francis Garzia. Piano soli—"Reflets Dans L'Eau" (Debussy), "Eleventh Rhapsodie" (Liszt), Felian Garzia. Piano and violin—"Sonata in A Minor Op. 23" (Beethoven), Felian and Francis Garzia.

Elena de Sayn, accompanied by Winifred Lakeman, will play at the annual authors' breakfast of the National League of American Pen Women Saturday, at the Willard Hotel, at which Mrs. Franklin Roosevelt will be the guest of honor.

Robert Frederick Freund, barytone soloist at St. Thomas' Church, will give a program of songs at the Women's City Club this afternoon. Mr. Freund's program is as follows: "Bin Schwan" (Grieg), "Auf Flugeln des Gesanges" (Mendelssohn), "Du Bist Wie Eine Blume" (Thompson), "Gloria" (Buzzi-Peccia), "April" (Rasbach), "Mountains" (Rasbach). Mrs. Edna Lee Freund will be the accompanist.

The United States Navy Band will play at the Capitol tomorrow afternoon. This will be the first time that the children will have band music for their egg rolling on Capitol Hill. On Tuesday and Thursday evenings the band will play at Constitution Hall for the annual convention of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Friday evening at the band auditorium in the Navy Yard, Lieut. Benter will present a program made up entirely of the compositions of William H. Woodin, Secretary of the Treasury. These numbers have been selected with a view to showing Mr. Woodin's versatility as a composer. His latest work, the symphonic suite, "Covered Wagon Days," has been arranged for concert band by Mr. George Drumm, and will be presented for the first time in this form.

The program today at the 5 o'clock hour of music at Friendship House, 324 Virginia avenue southeast, will be one of unusual interest. Mme. Hanenfeldt will tell of Easter customs in old Russia and play a group of piano solos by Russian composers. Miss May Libbey will give several readings appropriate to the Easter season, and Miss Harriette Mitchell, delightful soprano, will sing.

At the Chess Table

By WILLARD H. MUTCHLER

The second round play in the Federal News' two Federal championship tournaments progressed rapidly despite the fact that eliminations were based on the principle of a total of two out of three in three-game matches. On Monday night six players were eliminated in the intermediate-class tourney. A. H. Aronson, Civil Service, defeated G. W. Hervey, Federal Farm Board, to the tune of 2 to 0. H. G. Ferguson, Geological Survey, won from David Waight, Army Medical Center, by the same score. D. S. Burch, Agriculture, eliminated J. B. Eskin, Geological Survey, also by a score of 2 to 0. F. A. Hopkins, Labor, scored 2 to 0 over T. L. Norris, Federal Farm Board, finishing the second partie with a crushing king's side attack and a queen sacrifice. J. Roberts, Agriculture, totaled 2½ to ½ in disposing of O. L. Lamp, Postoffice. A. E. McClure, Agriculture, defeated his teammate, F. E. Kurtz, in a lengthened struggle by 2½ to ½. W. H. Bowers, Model Basin, won a lone game from J. L. Rubin, Library of Congress, Monday night. Resuming play on Wednesday night, Rubin won an unfinished game, and the third game was taken by Bowers.

In the advanced class H. M. Tate was victor in the only match concluded in the first evening's play, defeating E. R. Shepard, Bureau of Standards, 2½ to ½. E. M. Knapp, Patent Office, remains with a score of 1½ to ½ over E. M. Weeks, Bureau of Engraving, with the third game unfinished as we go to press. The remaining match was a battle royal between C. C. Bettinger, Veterans' Bureau, former Capital City champion, and J. W. Byler, Interior, present District match champion. Byler scored the first game on the second evening of play. It was very stubbornly contested, exceedingly well played and lasted upward of 60 moves.

The standing of the players by individual scores, although immaterial, so far as ultimate titles are concerned, is given for the information of readers.

The pairings for tomorrow evening in the intermediate event are as follows, the first named having white: Aronson vs. Hopkins; Roberts vs. Burch; McClure vs. Bowers; Ferguson, bye. The tentative pairings for the advanced class read: Tate vs. Knapp; Weeks vs. Byler; Bettinger vs. Mundelle. In the event that both Weeks and Bettinger are eliminated in the play remaining before Monday, Byler will encounter Mundelle and toss to decide the color. Play commences at 8 o'clock at the Federal Clubhouse, 1515 Sixteenth street northwest. The public is invited to attend. With the narrowing down to at most 13 players from the original 31, play in both tourneys should be well worth watching.

International Team Tourney.

Readers should be extremely interested in the news which has just been forthcoming from Harold M. Phillips, chairman of the U. S. Chess Team Committee, which, in a letter he has sent us, is, in part, as follows:

"You will remember in the summer of 1931 in Prague, when America, in competition with eighteen rival countries, won the chess team championship and brought the Hamilton Russell Cup. Arrayed against us were such masters as Alekhine, Rubenstein, Bogoljubow, Tartakower, Spielmann, Maroczy, Flohr, Sultam Kahn and others. It was a great victory and a proud moment for American chess.

"This year's international team tournament will be played at Folkestone, England, between June 12 and 16. We must defend the cup! We must send the strongest team at our disposal. Frank J. Marshall and Isaac Kashdan, stars of the former team, are with us again, enthusiastic in their support of American chess. To determine who the other three contestants shall be, we are arranging a tournament to take place in New York City beginning the first week in May. There are many talented young players anxious to fight for the United States in defense of the cup."

The team members, as readers may be aware, go as amateurs without any monetary compensation whatever. Traveling expenses, as before, are contributed by chess lovers the country over. Readers interested in subscribing toward this worthy chess classic are urged to write Alfred A. Linke, U. S. Chess Team Committee, treasurer, Manhattan Chess Club, Hotel Alamac, New York City. Subscriptions will be published in both the American Chess Bulletin and in the Chess Review. The committee is working in close cooperation with the National Chess Federation in matters pertaining to the team.

Notes.

Readers are reminded to keep the date, April 26, open, whereon to meet their editor personally in his simultaneous exhibition to be given at the Jewish Community Center.

We are indebted to Albert W. Fox for the appended gamelet. It illustrates a pretty "trap" variation in the Blackmar Gambit well worth knowing.

Solution to Problems.

List of what Mr. Nathan Nussbaum has to say about his "Stein," which appeared last Sunday: "I apologize for submitting an erroneous problem. After solving No. 523 the idea of forming a beer stein problem occurred to me. I guess I was too anxious to submit it. I can not plead that I had too many beers, because it wasn't legal then. To make amends, I rearrange the problem. It is not as intoxicating as the other and its simplicity is apt to give all solvers a chance. Try this: Black, 8 pieces: K on QKt3; B on KKt5 and KB3; Kt on QKt2; Ps on QKt4, K3, KB6 and KKt4. White, 10 pieces: K on QB2; Q on QKt3; R on QKt2; B on K4; Kts on K5 and K7; Ps on QKt4, Q2, K2 and K3. White to play and mate in three."

And Jacob Frech writes: "Problem 524, 'The Stein,' generates about 40,000,000 series. Both as verbally described and as diagrammed, black K is on QKtsq, causing a leak in the stein at black QKt3. Through that leakage the forced three-move mate series seemingly have been lost. If black K were on QKt3 the stein would be perfect, but 1 Kt-QB8 would mate in two; otherwise it would be a valid three-mover by 1 Q-B3."

We have had several inquiries re No. 521 after the moves 1 Q-Kt6, K-Q4. The continuation is as follows: 2 Q-R5ch, K-K3; 3 BxP mate. Or 2 . . ., K-B3; 3 P-Kt8(Kt) mate. Or 2 . . ., K-Q5; 3 B-Kt6 mate.

Oscar Vinje, composer of the "cooked" No. 522, writes, "As the old maxim says, too many cooks spoil the problem, and so it has proved to be more of an April Fool novelty than I expected. There are several ways of eliminating this cook, e. g.: Place black Q on KR5 and add a black P at KR4. I solved your dreadnaught No. 521 in something over half an hour. Although I realized it was intricate it never occurred to be that your readers would fail to solve it. A friend of mine solved it in two hours." For shame, solvers!

And now C. A. Hesse's end-game, No. 522, is question! Robias writes, "In 522, why wouldn't Kt-Q3 as white's second move save a lot of worry? If the P then queens, white mates in two by B-Q8ch. On any other move white prevents queening by B-B5." And Oscar E. Vinje submits a variation claiming that 3 Kt-Q3ch is a sufficient "cook." Thus: 1 P-R4ch, K-Kt3; 2 B-Q8ch, K-B4; 3 Kt-Q3ch!, K-Q5!; 4 Kt-K!, P-Kt8 (Kt)!; 5 P-R4, Kt-K7; 6 B-B7 and wins.

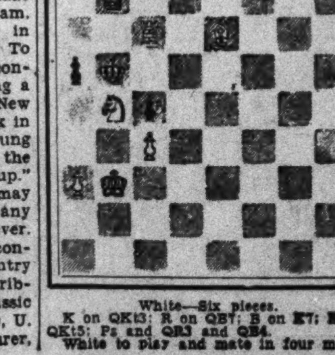
Thanks to G. E. Bishop, we give solvers today a position which W. K. Wimsatt, jr., playing in a match at Boston, announced mate in four. The younger Wimsatt is at present teaching in a New England school, but finds opportunity occasionally to journey to the larger cities for chessic recreation.

Problem No. 525.

W. K. WIMSATT, Jr. (actual play).

K on QKt3; Q on QKtsq; Ps on QR3 and QB4.

Black—Four pieces.



White—Six pieces.

K on QKt3; R on QB7; B on K7; Kt on QKt5; Ps and QR3 and QB4.

White to play and mate in four moves.

ART AND ARTISTS IN WASHINGTON

By VYLLA POE WILSON.

THE climax of the art season is marked in our National Capital by many notable collections, both in the public and private galleries which add to the enjoyment of the spring visitors to Washington.

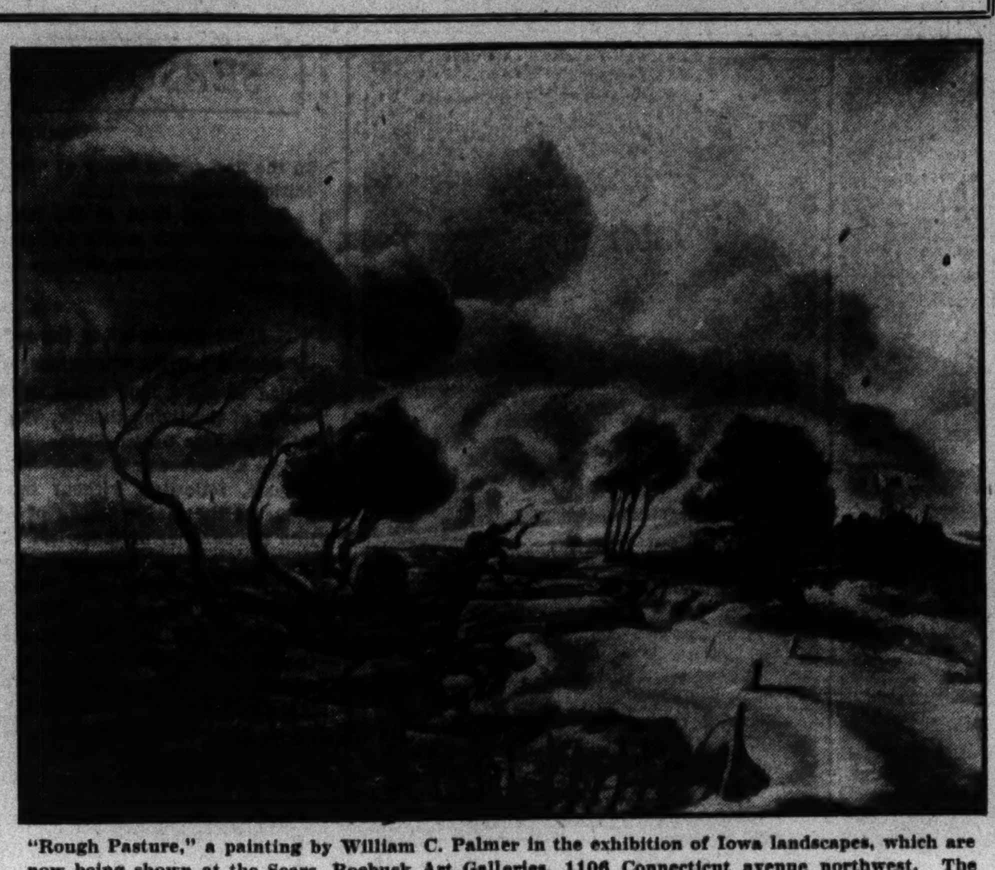
A very unusual and valuable collection of pen and ink and water colors by the late William T. Smedley, the gift of Mrs. Smedley to the Congressional Library, are now on exhibition in the division of fine arts of the library. These drawings were made for reproductions in books and form part of the cabinet of American illustration recently established at the library. The Smedley exhibition is the first one of what will be a most important series.

William T. Smedley was born March 26, 1858, in Chester County, Pa. He entered a newspaper office at the age of 15; studied engraving in Philadelphia and art at the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts. In 1878 he went to New York, and later to Paris, where he studied under Jean Paul Laurents. He opened a studio in New York in 1880 and from that time was actively engaged as illustrator for Harper's and other standard periodicals. In 1882 he journeyed through Canada at the instigation of the governor general, the Marquis of Lorne, preparing illustrations for "Picturesque Canada." After that he made several sketching tours in the United States, and in 1890, one around the world.

In 1881 he made his first contribution to the National Academy of Design, New York; and in 1888 was represented for the first time in the Paris Salon. In 1890 he won the William T. Evans prize with "A Thanksgiving Dinner."

The Pelican Club, in its new location at 423 Eleventh street, is holding currently an exhibition of modern paintings loaned by the Art League of Washington. The exhibit includes two paintings by Robert Hogue, a portrait by Robert Darrah Miller, two landscapes by Peter Keenan, and a group of oils by Lloyd Ney. These are all New Hope artists, from that art settlement in Pennsylvania, and their work is shown at the club until May 1.

Spring comes officially to the Public Library with a colorful exhibition of paintings of North American wild flowers, beautiful reproductions of full color made by Mary Vaux Walcott for her book, "North American Wild Flowers." These prints are shown in wall cases in the lobby of the second floor, main branch. Augmenting the wall cases are displays of beautifully illustrated nature studies, flower and animal drawings in books owned by the library. The library's collection includes many fine books, portfolios and other material that are called to our attention by interesting displays whenever we visit the buildings.



"Rough Pasture," a painting by William C. Palmer in the exhibition of Iowa landscapes, which are now being shown at the Sears, Roebuck Art Galleries, 1106 Connecticut avenue northwest. The exhibition opened on April 6 and will continue through the month.

The Northeastern Branch of the Public Library holds its second exhibition, sponsored and arranged for by the Art League of Washington. Seldom have we seen such a delightful and cool show of water colors as are shown in the spacious children's room of the second floor of this branch. They are twelve large water colors of the St. Lawrence River, by Fred Hare, and they bring a freshness that is very pleasing. The main reading room on the first floor has a selected group of oils by Pennsylvania artists, and include portraits, scenes of Pennsylvania hills and farms, by William Goodell, Robert Miller, Robert Hogue, Harriet Lord, and Margaret Claxton. We understand that response has been quite high among the art lovers in the Northeast section in the city, in that they have the opportunity of seeing pictures conveniently while usually exhibitions are restricted to the Northwest section. Visual art education is so closely allied to education by reading that it is important that children may have the opportunity of seeing pictures frequently. Nowhere is there better opportunity for this than in the public library and its branches. A fine stride in that direction was made with a large purchase of fine reproductions by famous paintings, which were placed throughout the branches. Contemporary art is afforded now by these changing exhibitions, and it is hoped that encouragement will be given to this work.

Further opportunity is given art lovers to purchase fine art at low prices in a benefit sale sponsored by the Art League of Washington in temporary galleries at 727 Seventeenth street northwest. There may be seen hundreds of oil and water color paintings, craftwork, sculpture, etchings and other prints, all at prices from one dollar to twenty dollars. Equally as interesting are the many walls enameled tiles from the Moravian Potteries which are brought here especially for this exhibition. Unique little pieces, they are admirable for use as ornaments, paper weights, hot plates, and may be used in series in garden walls, fireplaces, &c.

Modern abstractions, and drawings by Washington artists come down from the galleries at the Art League at 2111 Bancroft place, the third quarterly Washington art show, which will open Tuesday for two weeks. This time a new plan in selecting pictures to be shown will be used. Each member may specify one painting to be exempt from jury, in that it must be hung, and then the other paintings entered will be subject to the league committee of hanging, which is composed at this time of Sewell Johnson, Bjorn Egeli, Antoinette Fulton, Robert Gates, and Cara Draper Kimberley.

Through the courtesy of the Minister of Finland, L. Astrom, an exhibition of Finnish rugs, tapestries, arts and craft form an important part of the current exhibition of the Sears-Roebuck Art Galleries. There is also a loan collection of twentieth century etchings and prints through the courtesy of Lessing Rosenwald, of Philadelphia; paintings in oil and water colors by William C. Palmer, Robert P. Kilbert, Hazel C. Ewell, Lilian Giffin, Ruth H. Oneill, Jean Marie Guislain and Anita Willetts Burnham; etchings by Maxim Seibold; a loan collection of Chinese ancestor paintings through the courtesy of Lieut. Thomas D. White and an exhibition of ship models by the Washington Chapter, Ship Model Makers Club.

The science teacher has assigned the boys of the fifth and sixth grades to plots in the school garden, making a total of 105 boys engaged in this activity. The association has appropriated funds for making lantern slides of these gardens in various stages of growth, to be shown later to parents and classes.

Colored lantern slides made by Miss Agnes Motyka were shown at the Easter assembly held by the lower grades. The upper grade, under the supervision of Miss E. Biret, featured recitations and songs.

Part of the annual spring play which was presented on April 6 and 7 will be presented.

WHITTIER.

A "Spring Festival," given by the children of the Whittier School, opened the parent-teacher meeting Monday afternoon. Many of the poems by the pupils were original and helped to make an interesting spring program.

Miss Hopkins' class won the attendance prize given to the room having the largest percentage of mothers present.

Mrs. Hansen, student art chairman, requested mothers to save discarded clothes. Notices will be sent out in May giving the date of the week in which these clothes may be sent to the school, where they will be collected and sent to student aid headquarters at 1464 Columbia road. Mothers having spare time were also urged to go to student aid headquarters on Wednesday mornings to help sew. The need for help is great.

A motion was passed that $5 be sent to the Emergency Milk Fund, to which fund $1 was voluntarily contributed. It was voted that the association buy the Congress Library, which contains complete reports by chairmen and outlines work accomplished during the year.

The regular meeting of the association was held April 7. Mrs. Sorenson gave a report on the protest meeting recently called at Roosevelt High School. It was moved and seconded that since the reduced budget would affect the efficiency of the schools and 80,000 children, the association support the efforts of the organizations represented at the protest meeting to the extent, if necessary, of sending notice of this action to the President, the Senate and the House.

Mrs. Maurice, chairman of ways and means, reported a profit of $36.25 from the card party of March 17. Miss Florence Fox, specialist in elementary education, told the story of "The Little Iron Pot."

At the last meeting of the Fillmore Association Ben Seekford, president, appointed a committee to raise funds to meet an emergency due to the banking situation. This was done by selling lunches to the school children on Wednesday. The next meeting of the association will be held on April 24, the postponement being due to the Easter holidays.

JACKSON.

The resolution of the Jackson Association urging a more generous allotment of funds is being sent to the President, Congress and Commissioners. The monthly meeting of the association was held Monday.

The association will give a benefit card party tomorrow at 8 o'clock at 740 Tenth street. Five dollars was voted toward expenses of the State office. The children's Glee Club, conducted by Miss Hallie, sang several selections. Evelyn Frank sang several solos, and Constance Ward played as a piano solo, "Melody of Love."

KEENE.

The Keene Association met Tuesday. Dr. William Arthur Shannon talked on the "Summer Round-Up and the Preschool Child." The Dairy Council entertained with a moving picture film on "Child Health."

A motion was made and passed to send the president and principal to the State convention dinner. A letter of congratulation, on her recent marriage, is to be sent from the association to Mrs. Dyer, formerly Miss Henrietta King, principal of the Keene School for a number of years and a member of the Keene Parent-Teacher Association since it was formed.

BOOKS AND AUTHORS

By ELISABETH E. POE.

THE coming of George Bernard Shaw is a literary event long denied to these shores. Now he has visited the United States and received the acclaim so justly his due, one wonders whether the gifted Irishman will modify his strictures against Americans.

Really, while he may not care for us, George Bernard Shaw has a multitude of sincere admirers in this country. The welcome being accorded him should do its part in melting the hardness of his heart toward us.

One thing is certain, Mr. Shaw has no cause to complain of the American sale of his books. His coming here has revived interest in them and the sales apparently have been enormously increased because of this fact.

Of course, Mr. Shaw may return to his home land and out-Dickens Dickens with stinging "American Notes." If so, they will not lack for an American audience, at least.

The recent statement by the Most Rev. Cosmo Lang, Archbishop of Canterbury, that English bishops are addicted to the reading of detective stories recalls the fact that this pleasant literary vice is indulged in by many of America's great and good.

Wilson, Harding and Hoover were among the Presidential readers of thrillers and their example was followed by many solons, Supreme Court justices and high-ranking officials of varying sorts.

The writers of real detective stories are few and far between since Sir Conan Doyle and Edgar Wallace went on the quest to solve the eternal mystery. Most of the thriller writers have a dreadful sameness about their products. Their output lacks the real flavor of the detective classics of Poe, Doyle and their peers.

The thousands of admirers of Sidney Lanier, the songbird of the South, will rejoice in the most detailed record of his life in "Sidney Lanier," by Aubrey Harrison Starke (The University of North Carolina Press, Chapel Hill, N. C.).

In this book the entire body of Lanier's work is discussed, collected and uncollected, poems, essays, lectures, books for boys and those three dissimilar volumes, "Tiger Lilies," "Florida" and "The Science of English Verse."

Mr. Starke believes that Lanier's greatness consists not so much in his achievement as poet as in his accomplishment as a man. He was a Southerner who refused to be sectional, a conservative who attacked orthodoxy, a champion of artistic experimentation and of the right of man to live and love and grow in beauty as opposed to the increasing threat of industrial slavery, subordination to machinery and the insatiable desire for profits. Lanier was a man with a message peculiarly worth listening to in the present period of economic and social unrest.

Twelve poems not included in the collected volume are here reprinted. The author has had access to a considerable number of previously unpublished letters among other sources hitherto not drawn upon. The book has 30 illustrations, including title pages of all Lanier's volumes published during his lifetime, pictures of places associated with Lanier, a number of portraits and a pen and ink sketch of Lanier not previously reproduced.

The chapters devoted to Lanier's poetic career are full and thrilling and we see it develop to its full height year by year. Like other poets, Lanier cherished for a time the idea of a magazine of his own, but it was without definite result. It is to be remembered, too, that Lanier made an imperishable gift in "The Science of English Verse" to the poets who were to follow after him.

Minute Reviews.

Women really like the caveman type of men, we are to believe if we follow to the end the story written by Arthur Stringer, "Marriage by Capture" (The Bobbs-Merrill Co., Indianapolis). This is the story of a beautiful and willful girl who leaves her party to explore alone in the Canadian North Woods, and, of course, is lost only to come upon a lonesome cabin in which lives a man who has isolated himself from the world. That the world he had belonged to is the same type as the one to which the girl belongs makes added interest to the story. But they live through many exciting struggles and conflicts of will. When she is rescued she does not like her freedom from capture and never seems to be really happy until the man leaves his isolation to capture her once more and take her to the nearest justice of the peace. This author wastes very little time with description, but weaves in his story the atmosphere against which he places his drama, that the mind visualizes the cabin and the magnificent view from it and the other grandeurs of the Canadian North Woods.

A most laudable and in most ways most successful effort to evaluate the services of the President of the United States from 1789 to the present time is found in the new book, "American Presidents," by Thomas Francis Moran (Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., New York).

From George Washington to Franklin D. Roosevelt this author shows that he has made a real study of his subject. Of Roosevelt he points out that a man who has received the mandate from the people as he has speaks for the Nation as a whole. He points out that the present President of the United States is an American of old and well-established stock.

More than a million boys are collecting stamps in the United States today so that "The Young Stamp Collector's Own Book," by Ellis Parker Butler (the Bobbs-Merrill Co., Indianapolis), will not only be of interest to our own boys, but those of other nations as well. Of course, there are many girl collectors who will have one of these books of their own or borrow their brothers. We learn from this book that stamp collecting has been in the ascendancy during the last 60 or 70 years. The author himself began collecting stamps in 1879, 44 years ago.

These gummed labels that are stuck on a letter or parcel to show that postage is paid, mark through the ages the progress of countries, men and events. In recent years commemorative stamps have added to such interest. The real stamp collector is always on the alert for a rare one to add to his collection.

"What is the world coming to?" we are constantly asking in these days, and one may find the answer, perhaps, in the engaging love story interwoven with the drama of the last ten years of American life in "Uncle Peel," by Irving Bacheller. (Frederick A. Stokes Co., New York.) The romance is an unusual one. The degenerating forces of today are graphically presented in this book.

The sportsman's wife must share the adventure with her husband or, at least, listen with interest to his tales of adventures, or she will find that she is out of tune with him. In "Adventures in a Man's World: The Initiation of a Sportsman's Wife," Courtney Borden has written a most entertaining book, which will engage the attention of the sportsman and the layman alike.

She tells in graphic words her experiences in hunting ruffed grouse in the north Michigan woods, fishing for the steelhead of the Rogue in Oregon, shooting canvasbacks in Saskatchewan, hunting big game in Alaska and Arctic Siberia, tramping behind a brace of setter or pointer dogs, in search of quail on her Mississippi plantation; wading a trout stream in May, and many other such adventures. "Women miss much in life that is worth while. In search of bigger things, we overlook small, simple pleasures," Mrs. Borden writes.

While this book is written essentially for women, it is not confined to a woman's viewpoint of sport.

What Today Means to You

By MARY BLAKE

"ARIES."

IF April 16 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 8:35 a. m. to 10 a. m., from 5 p. m. to 5:45 p. m. and from 9 p. m. to 10 p. m. The danger periods are from 12:15 p. m. to 1:30 p. m. and from 3:50 p. m. to 4:45 p. m.

You may find it difficult to compose yourself on this date and it will be difficult to maintain any persistent mental activity. Books of a romantic or adventuresome nature will do much to make pleasant an otherwise dull time. Children forced to stay in the company of adults will be most restless.

The child born on this April 16 will quite possibly find itself deprived, for one reason or another, of many of the advantages offered to most little ones on this day and age. It will find itself frequently the brunt of unkind practical jokes. Not a good mixer, and a child who seemingly prefers to be off by itself a great part of the time.

If April 16 is the date of your birth, yours is essentially an artistic nature, one loving and craving beauty in adornment, home surroundings and decorations and in fact in all things. At the same time, you are not one who is willing to work hard and suffer hardships and discomfort in order to make these things your own. You are inclined to grumble and curse your luck if things go against you. You are easily discouraged and if ever you get "down and out" it is unlikely that you will make a comeback.

Born on April 16, you may take an active interest in some venture seeking to promote one or more of the arts. You have some business acumen and it is not unlikely that you might make a considerable success as a promoter or manager of others having artistic talent. You would have little or no interest in matters of a purely commercial nature. You have a tendency to seek to accomplish things in too much haste. In affairs of the heart both sexes are impetuous and it would seem that many an ideal match has gone on the rocks because of this characteristic. Once married, you will find considerable contentment in the companionship of your mate. You may take great pride in rearing a large family.

How to Keep Well

By DR. W. A. EVANS

IT IS SERIOUS.

V. K. writes:

1. What kind of a disease is peritonitis?

2. From what does it come?

3. What cure is there for young persons (about 9 years old)?

4. In a urine test, what is the meaning of diacetic acid, acetone, and hyalin casts?

REPLY.

1. A severe and serious one. It is due to an infection of the peritoneum. This membrane covers the digestive apparatus.

2. From wounds, appendicitis, infected gall bladder, perforating ulcers, and some other causes.

3. Operation is generally called for.

4. If diacetic acid and acetone are present in fair quantities the person has acidosis. Hyalin casts signify an irritation of the kidneys.

TANTRUMS.

Mrs. P. writes:

1. I read your reply to Mrs. M. E. G. I know of a similar case where the mother treated her child's temper tantrums as tired tantrums and, acting on that theory, worked a cure in a short time.

2. Is holding the breath dangerous?

REPLY.

1. Fatigue is the cause of tantrums occasionally. In fact, fatigue may cause many and diverse manifestations.

2. It is in a very few cases. However, we must be guided by the rule. If the rare exceptions determine actions, things become illogical and innumerable snarls result.

NERVES.

P. A. M. writes:

1. What kind of shots are put into a person's arm to quiet the nerves? Does the injection carry any drug with it?

2. Is this a good way to quiet the nerves?

REPLY.

1. While many medicines are given hypodermically there is a pretty good chance that morphine is one of the ingredients of the mixture you are asking about.

2. It is not. What is called nerves is a state of mind. The condition which calls for medicine to quiet the nerves is a state of mind. The best procedure for this is to take control of the emotions that are running the machine on the rocks. There are times when physicians are justified in giving mild sedatives to bring the emotions under control. But I doubt if there is ever a time when there is justification for using morphine for that purpose. Certainly they are infrequent.

SUBTLETY IN LINE AND COLOR DISTINGUISHES FABRICS FOR SUMMER SEASON

Mrs. Roosevelt's Easter Hat Is Of Blue Straw

Chapeau Will Match Gown Not Heretofore Worn; Velvet Bow on Hair.

By VYLLA POE WILSON.

EASTER chapeaux have an amusing suggestion of Old Mother Goose tendency to have a very high crown on her hat. Presto, Dame Fashion has clapped her hands and behold the shallow crowns have taken their place in the background while the fashionable hats have height as their most important essential. We have had high crowns before, of course, but on hats that fitted well down on the head quite unlike the coquettish affairs of this Easter that cover only part of the head and often do not come across one side or the back at all.

Those who like the tiny hats and the lower crowns can adhere to their liking by the placing of a bow or feather or ornament at the top of the hat to give it the proper height. Some of the new hats look like the old shallow crowned sailors with the brims turned up over the crown and held in place by a perky bow.

It was at the turn of the century or perhaps a little later that the fashionable milliners developed the tiny postage stamp hats fitting well back over the waved pompadour with a bow on top at the side or back three or four times the proportion of the hat. Who can say we are not coming to this style again.

New Hat and Dress For First Lady.

Led by Mrs. Roosevelt the women of many different circles of the National Capital will start out to church this morning in new straw hats and most of them in new dresses. Mrs. Roosevelt's Easter hat is of dark blue straw to match her dark blue silk dress never worn before. Mrs. Roosevelt's hat is fashioned to conform to her style of wearing her luxuriant golden brown hair long and softly knotted in the back, but the blue velvet bow on the side back gives the necessary height.

Mrs. Curtis Dall, daughter of President and Mrs. Roosevelt, has engaged the attention of the younger set in Washington with the intriguing individuality of her hats. Mrs. Dall has pretty hair and her hats are almost always placed high and to one side.

One thing is very apparent on the Easter parade today, which, of course, really began yesterday or even the day before, is that the women of this hour consider it chic to buy not only as a sign of spring but as a sign of their confidence in the upturn of events.

Besides, even the masculine mind may be awake to understand those who have to economize in their marketing or go out to seek their fortune in line with other unemployed can do so with a more confident heart under a modish and becoming hat, shoes that are trim and nice looking and gloves which fit the hands faultlessly. A woman may be poor but she can never feel poor under such circumstances.

Family of Senator Long Visits White House.

One of the most interesting groups that have passed through the state room of the White House recently in the guise of sightseers was the interesting family of Senator Huey P. Long, of Louisiana. Mrs. Long, a quiet-looking pretty young woman, was followed by her slender schoolgirl daughter, who made notes in a huge notebook of everything, and a lad, perhaps in his teens, and several smaller boys. Mrs. Long wore a becoming sport suit of soft yellowish beige knittted material, with a soft white silk blouse. Her hat was a brown straw one with a narrow brim and she wore a brown fox fur.

There is lways an interest centering about the occupants of the famous palace which is the French Embassy on Sixteenth street. Washington society is welcoming with avidity the young and charming new chatelaine of the embassy, Mme. Andre de la Boulaye, wife of the new Ambassador, and their two quite young schoolgirl daughters, Agnes and Maria Theresa. Mme. de la Boulaye looked very smart on her arrival in Washington in a tweed ensemble of gray and blue with a huge natural lynx collar and a small hat of straw with a suggestion of the new high crown. The two French lassies were dressed in plain tweed skirts with slip-on knitted blouses and swagger coats to match and berets very much on the order the American schoolgirls have borrowed from the French.

Mrs. Roosevelt's Riding Habit Is Light Gray.

Since riding habits are so much the order of the hour these nice spring days, Mrs. Roosevelt's riding suit of very light shade of gray, smooth-finish cloth is of deep interest. This is made with riding trousers and the conventional semifitted tailored coat. With this Mrs. Roosevelt wears a white silk blouse with a mannish collar and a dark-blue silk string tie. About her head she ties a piece of ribbon, usually dark blue or Eleanor blue.

Miss Katrina McCormick, the pretty daughter of Ruth Hanna McCormick Simms, former representative from Illinois, is one of the most indefatigable riders of the younger set and is often seen in a green whipcord riding habit, her green straw block hat caught by its cord on a button of her coat. Some times Miss McCormick rides without a coat, wearing instead of a silk blouse a creamy, soft flannel one with the collar left open to show the turn of her lovely throat.

Since Miss Helen Robbins, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins, seems to be a special minister to see that the young Roosevelts are initiated into all the good times of Washington society, her clothes are of particular interest. This piquant young lady usually wears tailored clothes these days, but originally of cut and hue, and her hats are intriguingly individual as any seen above faces in Washington.

Capital City Club met Wednesday at the home of Miss Frances Tancill with Mrs. Ida Teeple and Mrs. Mildred Leuhrs assisting. A get-together party was held Saturday evening. Elbow Length Capes Prove Best for Wear

(Associated Press.)

This city, with a natural flare for military pomp and color, is taking to capes in women's costumes like a duck to water. Even chilly spring winds can not keep the women safely in their heavier coats. The sun comes out and so do the capes—fairly shouting "1933."

But fashion arbiters are issuing warnings to women about their choices of the new style. The elbow length cape is proving the best for general wear since it tends to give height and not increase the width of the figure.

The knee-length cape is proving the big favorite in sport styles, as it gives warmth to the sports spectator and is more strictly tailored.

The full-length cape is excellent in an economy wardrobe as it can be used in the place of a coat. Many are even reversible, giving two color choices for various outfits.

Short women should be careful, stylists say, of any cape that "hits them in the middle," because it will also cut off their height. On the other hand, a cape that falls full length will make the figure seem "all cape and very little woman."

The girl whose mannerisms and general wardrobe reflect her breezy, athletic hours on golf links and bridle path will look best in the more military styles. She should choose to wear with them small, smart hats in tailored styles, walking oxfords and plain gauntlets. She need not even be afraid to let her walk borrow a suggestion from the military "strut," head up, shoulders thrown back and the cape rippling in the breeze.

That brings up the subject of the manner in which a cape should be worn. Out goes the old slouch, the languid feminine air. In comes the alert, perfectly groomed woman of fashion.

Capes are adaptations from military styles, the style experts point out. And it will never do to let them sag at the hem-line or to wear them carelessly hung from the shoulders. The wearer should walk freely and gracefully, or her lack of animation will become more apparent, and she might better have clung to the purely feminine mode.

Cheap Dress No Economy, Wear Proves

Inexpensive Fabrics Soon Sag Out of Ling and Colors Fade Fast.

By DARE.

I wish to discuss things with you today—which have nothing to do with the latest styles in anything, either. One is, value. The other, comfort.

I think the automobile presents the best example of value, since any automobile "gets you there," as it were. Yet you can spend $500 for certain types of cars, new—and you can spend $5,000 for others. So then, what do you pay for? Obviously, both machines are for transportation. There must be a reason. There is.

You can pay $3 for a dress. You can pay $300, which you shouldn't. Is there a difference? There is.

Cheap merchandise, however elegantly termed "inexpensive," is usually, not positively always, but usually, cheap merchandise. And cheap wearing apparel, while it will cover you as well as the expensive will, and will keep you warm or dry or neither or both—will wear out, sag out of line, fade out of color, and in the first place look like just what it is. It is positively no economy, no matter what you think about it—or what your eyes and ears lead you to believe. A cheap dress requires three cheap dresses to take the place of one good one. And the one good one always looks expensive and elegant, while the three cheap ones, with nothing but variety on their side, always look cheap.

Cheap Shoes May Look Well But Soon Wear Out.

And down the line in shoes, stockings, hats, everything. Excepting the things one makes for oneself—and these of good material, or they are still cheap. Take shoes. A cheap shoe occasionally looks well and fits comfortably—more often it does not. After a few wearings it starts to hurt, burn or wobble out of shape. A good shoe will do the same if you wear it day in and day out, but not as fast as the cheap one will.

Now let's digress a moment. To the fact that I understand quite well how and why you might think that you can not afford to buy expensive clothes. But the fact is, and the point that I would like to convince all of my readers of at least, that you can afford to wear good clothes—and can not afford not to! Because there is no economy in cheap things. In fact, this or that pretty and attractive gadget that you pick up for 50 cents or a dollar is extravagant, because it has a butterfly's life, and must be thrown away in no time.

I tell you that two pairs of $10 shoes will outlast five $3 ones. And always look well, and always feel well. That a $6 dollar dress will look well—athough cheaply so, for only a fifth of the time that a $30 one will. And so on.

And I am not advising you to buy $150 dresses and $20 shoes, either, you notice. I am simply saying that you can't eat your cake and have it, too—nor save your pennies and be chic, or even save them, for that matter. Leave the important Paris gowns to people who can well afford them, but never be tempted by anything on earth to buy a new dress for less than $20—if you would be both wise and chic.

Comfortable and Appropriate Styles Wear Longest.

Now the second matter I wished to discuss with you was comfort and practicability. Haven't you ever noticed that the styles that prove the most popular—and stay in style longest—are those which are comfortable and appropriate? And stylish. No one but a fashion plate, some woman whose business or career it is to attract attention with her clothes, should wear anything that is not practical. And even the career woman should take good care that whatever she chooses in the way of an old or distinctive style is practical—the day of the concoction that wilted long before the midnight hour struck has gone.

Look at any smart beach today, any chic gathering, any truly smart tea. Isn't it sometimes even a bit astonishing—the simplicity of wearing apparel? And the appropriateness and comfort. Without comfort today—one simply has no style.

I close this article with a repetition—and a warning and a prayer. Don't buy cheap clothes, and do wear practical and comfortable clothes.

Au revoir.

The Washington Soroptimist Club held its monthly business meeting at the Willard Hotel on Wednesday. President Nora B. Huffman presided. The club went on record as sponsoring the National Symphony Orchestra by purchasing a box for the coming season.

The Soroptimist walk of pink dogwood trees, situated within the shadow of the Lincoln Memorial, will soon be a walk of blossoms. The club members have arranged a pilgrimage to the walk when the trees are in bloom, which they have invited other Soroptimist clubs to join.

Arrangements are being made by the Soroptimist Club to entertain in Washington at the end of the school year the boy or girl who has proven to be the best citizen from schools in cities and towns where Soroptimist clubs exist. This Washington Soroptimist Club project has been adopted as a national project by the American Federation of Soroptimist Clubs. The Soroptimist Club also went on record as sponsoring the renovize campaign in Washington and the suffrage movement for the District of Columbia.

Spring Blouses

Coiffures Now Dressed in Ten Different Ways

Ten-in-One Bob Figures in Midwest Beauty Trade Show; Hair Parted.

Chicago, April 15 (A.P.).—And now it is the ten-in-one bob in keeping with the four-in-one hat and the two-in-one dress.

This multistyle bob, as fashioned by Sidney Hart, of Detroit, was one of the new spring coiffures on parade at the tenth annual Midwest beauty trade show.

As its name implies, this bob is cut so that the hair can be dressed ten different ways, enabling a woman to wear her hair differently for various occasions.

Hair Parted in Center In Cutting Bob.

In cutting the bob, the hair is parted in the center and each side is tapered symmetrically. In dressing it, the hair can be parted on either side or in the center. Or it can be worn straight back. The hairline can be varied by curls or hints of bangs.

Another new bob is "the Alice in Wonderland coiffure." In this the hair is brushed straight back from the forehead, without a part, and held in place by a tortoise shell bandeau for daytime or a jeweled circle for evening.

Condos, a Chicago hair stylist, has a "coronet bob." It is a sophisticated, intricate, one-night, formal coiffure. One row of tiny, tight curls in rigid formation cross the top of the head, from ear to ear, forming a coronet. The back is dressed in tiny, tight curls.

Widow's Peak Built Out of False Eyelashes.

The creation of a "widow's peak" is another new one. This was achieved by John Mueller, also a Chicago hairdresser, by shaping the hairline and building a widow's peak out of false eyelashes or a tuft of the patron's own hair.

Another novel trick for spring is streaking the hair with gray or colored powder for dress occasions. Some gelatinous liquid is applied to mark the path of the streak. Then the powder is applied.

Some of the models appeared with long bangs set as figures, initials and emblems on the forehead.

Spring Suit Made Of Riviera Wool

Paris, April 15 (A.P.).—Mme. Peralta Ramos (the former Millicent Rogers) wears a suit of "Riviera blue" wool this spring. It is designed with a short jacket, having broadened shoulders; a simple, slender skirt and a white silk blouse striped with multicolored lines.

Style Parade Is Featured By Feathers

Feather trims, collars, boas, feather glove cuffs, belts and hats give a touch of frivolous femininity to many of the newest costumes for spring wear. Ostrich feathers are the favorite, while coque, kingfisher and pheasant are much used.

Evening clothes find more use for feathers than any other part of the mode. Decolletes are edged in them, wraps collared in them and gloves cuffed with their fluffy flattery.

A white crepe evening gown has shoulders edged with a line of blue kingfisher feathers, a dull purple satin jersey gown designed with a low cut back decolletage has two tufts of pale yellow feathers at its base, while a black crepe dinner gown has a decollete edged with bright flame colored feathers.

Feathers Employed On Evening Wear.

Multicolored Feather On White Organdy Collar.

Feathers appear in the daytime mode also. One black crepe afternoon frock has for its short sleeves detachable cuffs made of rose, beige and jade ostrich feather bands, while another has a multicolored feather butterfly perched on its white organdy collar.

Even the street mode has its feathered fancies, one suit of green wool being collared in bronze pheasant feathers.

Hats are using feathers which are more costly than the trims that have appeared in many seasons. Birds of paradise, sprays of osprey and swirls of lacquereed ostrich feathers appear on a number of toques for formal afternoon wear, while little feather novelties appear on many street models.

Voteless League.

The executive board of the Voteless D. C. League of Women Voters met on Friday at luncheon at the Women's City Club.

The board indorsed the principle of legislation providing for old age security and, also, opposed such reductions in the District appropriations as would cripple the work of the D. C. Government.

Miss Constance Roach of the National League, a guest at the luncheon, gave a short talk on the council of the national league which will meet in Washington April 25, 26 and 27.

Announcement was made that Mrs. Elizabeth Smith Friedman, chairman of the department of legal status of women has recently completed a survey of the legal status of women in the District of Columbia. It is anticipated that this will soon appear in printed form.

A tea will be given in the home of Mrs. William Kittle on Wednesday at which a speaker will be heard on "A School for Women Workers." Miss Mary Anderson of the Federal Womens Bureau will preside.

Last Friday evening the last of a series of discussions on the U. S. S. R. was given at the home of Mrs. M. O. Lorenz. Mrs. Rose Ladden Hanna, who has just returned from two years travel in Russia with "The Open Road," was the speaker of the evening. Mrs. Henry Chalmers, chairman of the Department of International Cooperation to Prevent War, who has planned this series of meetings, presided.

Woman's City Club

The membership committee, Mrs. William W. Spaid chairman, will be hostesses at the tea this afternoon in honor of newly elected members. Mr. Robert Frederick Freund, barytone, will give a program of songs.

The Sewing Circle, Mrs. C. H. Curl chairman, will resume its weekly meetings tomorrow at 10 o'clock, and the class in parliamentary law, Miss Bertha F. Wolfe instructor, tomorrow evening, at 7:45.

At the book hour on Tuesday afternoon, at 4:45, Mrs. Ruth H. Snodgrass will give a travel talk based on E. M. Newman's "Seeing London" and "Seeing Paris."

Mrs. Henry T. Rainey will be guest of honor at the April dinner of the business and professional section on Wednesday at 6:30. Dr. A. Frances Foye, chairman, will preside.

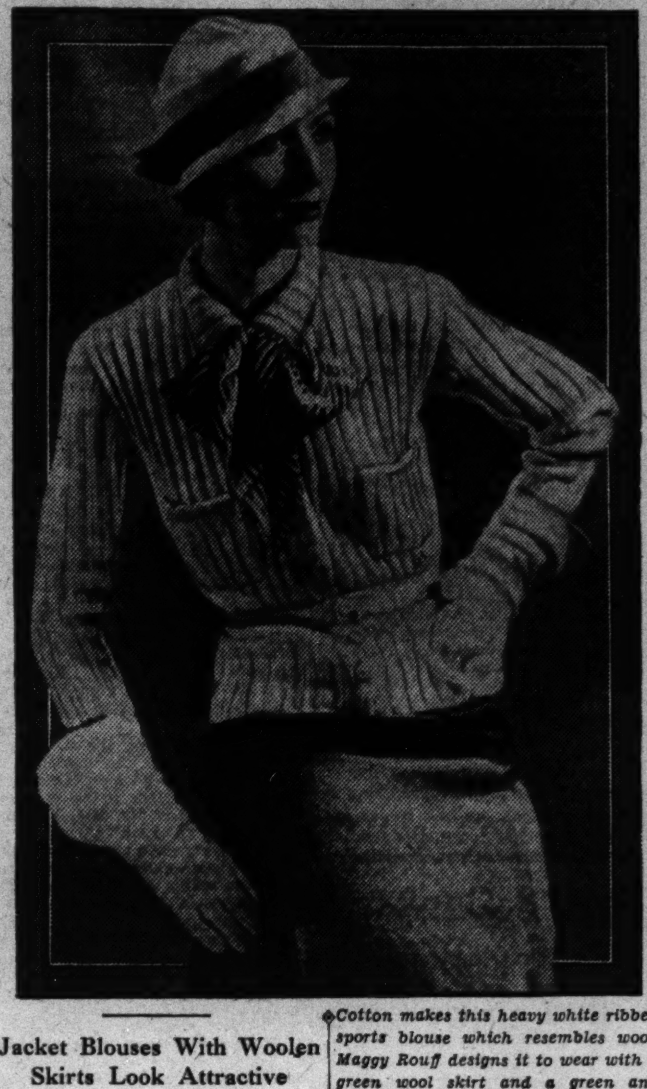
Card parties have been planned for Friday and Saturday afternoons and evenings of this week. The committee in charge is composed of Mrs. George W. Eastment and Mrs. Corbin Thompson, cochairmen; Mrs. Laura A. Bradley, Mrs. Edgar T. Brown, Mrs. George A. Chace, Mrs. William L. Corbin, Mrs. Gladys B. Middlemiss, Mrs. William W. Spaid and Mrs. Lyman B. Swormstedt.

Delta Gamma.

Former Representative Ruth Bryan Owen, recently appointed Minister to Denmark, will be guest of honor at a tea given by Delta Gamma. She joined the sorority when she was a student at the University of Nebraska. The tea will be given tomorrow afternoon rom 4:30 to 6:30 o'clock at the home of Miss Northa Porter, 2101 Connecticut avenue. Invitations have been sent to all presidents of national sororities in Washington, besides the active alumnae group of Delta Gamma.

The following members will preside at the tea table: Mrs. Cloyd Heck Marvin, Mrs. Herbert D. Brown, Mrs. Merle Thorpe, Mrs. Arthur Vandenberg and Mrs. William E. Lee. The committee in charge of arrangements is Mrs. Northcut Ely, Miss Helen Dyer, Miss Anne Larrabee and Miss Porter.

Cotton and Linen Much Used for Sports Wear



Cotton makes this heavy white ribbed sports blouse which resembles wool. Maggy Rouff designs it to wear with a green wool skirt and a green and white silk tie. The white hat with the green ribbon by LeMonnier.

Paris, April 15 (A.P.).—Cotton and linen play a prominent role in sports clothes this spring.

Frocks, coats, blouses, scarfs and hats appear in plain, ribbed and diagonal weaves made from the thread of the flax or cotton boll.

Linen or cotton frocks worn with hip-length wool jackets of a contrasting color are a favorite sports combination with some of the leading designers.

A short-sleeved frock of daffodil yellow linen appears with a hip jacket of brown jersey and a sailor hat made of novelty straw in tones of yellow, brown and white.

Cotton and linen jacket blouses with wool skirts are ready for wear on the golf links. One of the smartest outfits combines a green wool skirt with a jacket blouse of heavy ribbed white cotton finished with a green and white striped tie.

Sports models are designed on simple practical lines to allow ease of movement. Frocks are generally fashioned with short cap sleeves. Jackets are straight, while skirts are cut with a few kick pleats in the back or front and finished with hems from 10 to 12 inches from the ground.

Spring Frock Designs Vary Widely in Styles

Paris, April 15 (A.P.).—The frocks which are part of the new Easter ensemble offer the widest variety of color, cut and fabric shown in many seasons.

Cotton and linen are in the front ranks of fabric fashions in new supple weaves which closely resemble wool, while softly pebbled crepes, stripes, checks, floral prints, polka dots and soft, lightweight, pliable wools are offered in colors galore.

In designs the frocks also are widely varied, although most of them are based on a rather straight silhouette having a normal waistline and a hem 7 to 10 inches from the ground. Their diversity lies in sleeves which vary from shoulder capes to full-length necklines, which may be high, draped or scarfed, and belts which may be wide or narrow.

Sparkling Diamonds Found in Brooches.

Princess George of Greece has included in her springtime wardrobe a Lelong frock of crepe de chine printed in beige, red and black figures, worn over a beige slip and accented with incrustations of black crepe at the neckline and belt.

The Duchess de Caylus wears a Molyneux gown of pale beige crepe designed on simple lines and finished with cape sleeves.

Hats are as varied as the dresses. African fezes of knitted wool, straw or crepe; "high-hat" toques which rise 6 inches above the forehead, and flower-covered turbans are among the models.

Leather Bags Retain Envelope Design.

Gloves appear in such unusual fabrics as cotton piques, linen and silk crepe to match the frock. Bags retain the envelope design, in antelope, kid or ribbed leathers. Shoes appear in the same leathers, in beige, gray, navy blue or brown.

Here are some of the smartest costumes Paris has prepared for Easter:

A beige wool frock with a matching three-quarter-length coat, accompanied by an African fez and scarf and gloves of red and white polka-dotted crepe.

A long navy blue wool coat with a white cotton frock finished with a blue cord scarf and belt and topped with a toque of blue violets.

Karnes, Mrs. La Place and Mrs. Harry Cloplin assisting the hostess. The president, Miss Ellen Golden, presided. An interesting current event, "Miss Frances Perkins, a Leader of Women, a Leader Among Men," was read by Mrs. Henry F. Offterdinger. Miss Golden read a paper, "The Far East."

Woman's Relief Corps

Phil Sheridan Woman's Relief Corps met at the Thomas Circle Club, Mrs. Hattie Canada, president, presiding. Mrs. Pearle Miner Wilson, member of the Council of the National Woman's Relief Corps, was received by transfer from the department of Tennessee Woman's Relief Corps.

On Tuesday, at 2 p. m., the corps will give a bingo party in the dining room of the Southern Dairies Co., 60 M street northeast.

The corps is interested in the mass meeting to be held at the Washington Auditorium Tuesday, at 8:30 p. m., to oppose recognition of Soviet Russia by this country.

The next meeting will be an open meeting on May 5, at the Thomas Circle Club. This is the annual birthday party. The corps' dramatic club will give its annual play, "The Manless Wedding," that evening.

W. C. T. U.

The Kalorama Heights Union met April 6 at the home of Mrs. Josephine P. Kolton, vice president, at 1827 Kalorama road northwest. Delegates appointed to the executive session of the District of Columbia W. C. T. U. to be held Wednesday at the Bethany Baptist Church, Second and Rhode Island avenue northwest, are Mrs. Louise Halstead, Mrs. Eliza Griest, Mrs. Mary Ott, Miss Gertrude Arrnow and Miss Sarah Woodward.

Mrs. William A. Ross was appointed chairman of the committee for arrangements of the luncheon to be held at Corby's Bakery, 2301 Georgia avenue, May 12 at 12:30 p. m. The devotions were led by Mrs. Calvin Wight, missionary to China.

Miss Ruth Lockman told members of the Shepherd Park Union of the work she is doing in the Intercollegiate branch of the W. C. T. U. at the last meeting of the union held Monday at the home of Mrs. C. E. Riordan, 1425 Montague street northwest. She has visited 297 colleges in 28 States in her work. A social hour followed the business program.

Women's Guild

Mrs. Peter M. Anderson will preside over the meeting. Later a luncheon will be served to the members in the women's residence hall.

Gowns Easily Made Modish By Contrasts

"Eel," New Color for Women's Wear, Being Mixture of Brown and Gray.

By THE MEANDERER.

THE matter of handling line and color is to the Meanderer a matter of high importance in the present mode. Never has the actual texture of the fabric been less important. Gingham ranks with fine woolen, for street, organdy often is smarter than chiffon for evening.

Subtlety in the bringing out of line and color, no matter what the fabric—clever combinations and contrasts—daring disregard of the fabric classifications of other years, all have contrived to make it easy to be modish.

A black and white gown for dinner or evening, one of the perfect illustrations of what the Meanderer means by subtle handling of fabric, costs just $19.75 in a shop all Washington recognizes as exclusive. The gown is white satin with small black dots. Its cut is nothing extraordinary. The gown alone would not be noticeable. But to complement it the designers used black satin with white dots, a "twin material," to make a short, fitted, full-sleeved jacket. The effect of the combination is at once effective—really suave and individual, seldom found at such a price.

A knitted daytime dress is another illustration of making a fabric not unusual into a costume most distinctive. Knitted dresses are legion—becoming a decidedly popular fashion. But this particular knitted ensemble—composed of skirt, blouse, sleeveless jacket and a very new cape scarf—has something more than comes to mind in the mention of knit wear. The color of the suit is silvery blue attained by a mixture of blue and white boucle. The blouse of the suit has sleeves of full length in a lacy pattern. The skirt is plain, the sleeveless jacket is plain. The cape scarf gives the suit its real claim to distinction. It clings in svelte manner to the shoulders and falls in careless grace over the arms. Any woman will see readily the adaptability of the various parts of the suit—how the skirt and any one or all of the other three—the jacket, blouse or scarf may combine to suit the wearer's or the weather's inclinations.

Again, a gown described as to color in no better way than "like a bed of pansies" has a subtly developed style. The gown in the soft pansy colorings is of chiffon, a picture in itself, is brought out of the ordinary, out only by color, but by the use of a silk crepe jacket printed in exactly the same pattern. The printing on silk crepe gives a clearer, deeper color effect than that on chiffon, and the combination of the two is worthy of admiration from the most critical shopper.

Down into her shoe tips goes the importance of line and material—to the smart woman. In a blue-velvet draped and upholstered corner where one half expects to see gold or crystal slippers as fine as those of the Cinderella tradition, the Meanderer was shown the epitome of smartness in shoe fashions. The dozen or so pairs of shoes brought forth for the private exhibition and grouped on the blue velvet carpet had the charm of line and color—as do the gowns of this spring—more than a charm of actual intrinsic value. Most of the shoes represented styles that may be had ordinarily by special order, but which are ready for the discriminating customers who frequent this velvet-draped salon.

The line of the shoes has been skillfully accomplished by the best of foundation lasts, of course, but also by the something more that the head of this shoe department has been able to put into design and color. He has secured a woven leather for the making of these shoes which gives them the valued individuality of line. Very smooth calf skin in brown, black, beige, gray, blue, green and red, used with the woven leather in variations and contrasts of color makes infinite variety in the footwear. And if the shoes in the distinctive patterns already in stock do not suit the shopper she may arrange with the head of the shoe department to have her special order taken. The expense is not frightening—for the made to order shoes may be had for $10.50.

Eel is the name of a new color in women's wear, a color not as attractive in its sound as it is in reality. Eel is a mixture of gray and deep brown. It is almost black, and it is almost brown. Accessories of black or brown are equally good with "eel." Red accessories are particularly effective. A suit of eel silk crepe has a well-cut, fitted jacket and straight skirt. On the belt and buttons are the merest touches of flame red.

A wrap-around petticoat of white or pastel silk crepe in a nationally recognized brand of underthings has several buttons to be adjusted at the waistline so that the garment is sure to fit. The overlapping of the wrap-around garment gives the "shadow" service so necessary for wear with summer clothes. This necessary petticoat may be tailored or lace-trimmed. It sells for $1, as also does a matching chemise or dance set.

"String sweaters," featured in magazines of the mode, have arrived in Washington. They are just what their name implies—sweaters made of string. The string, however, is ordinary string, much like that tied around the packages from the corner grocery. It is knitted into really attractive slipover sweaters of patterns as interesting as those of expensive silk yarn. String sweaters are natural twine color or of bright, dyed shades.

Several fluffy evening dresses of organdy and mousseline with taffeta jackets have just been unpacked in one of the smaller shops known for its style-right garments. These newer summer evening gowns are priced as low as $15.75.

PEACE BACKED BY STRONG DEFENSE FORCE IS AIM OF NATIONAL CLUBWOMEN

Shriners to Help Raise Funds for Civic Festivals

Baseball Will Be Played on Night of April 27 With G. W. U. Team.

ALMAS TEMPLE, Ancient Arabic Order of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, will cooperate with the George Washington University in the opening of the latter's baseball season on the night of Thursday, April 27, when the first of a series of twelve intercollegiate games will be played in Griffith Stadium for the benefit of the National Capital civic fund.

The order calling for the aid of Shriners on this occasion was issued yesterday by Warren W. Grimes, illustrious potentate of Almas Temple, who expressed himself thoroughly in accord with the aims of the George Washington University, which seeks to raise money for the National Capital civic fund for the purpose of financing local city-wide civic celebrations.

Participation of Shriners in the event, which will be known as "Shrine night," will consist of field demonstrations by uniformed bodies, this part of the program being scheduled from 7 to 8 o'clock, immediately preceding the baseball game in which George Washington will engage the team representing the University of Delaware.

Shrine Drill Team Will Appear.

Acting on instructions from Potentate Grimes, Jesse E. Porter, captain of the Arab Patrol, has begun preparation of his drill team for the feature of the demonstration which will be the first scheduled for local Shriners out-of-doors this year. Six other officers and 32 men comprise Capt. Porter's patrol. They will go through a series of military maneuvers for which they have gained considerable public attention in this and other sections of the country.

The George Washington University has donated the services of its baseball team and athletic department, while Clark C. Griffith, owner of the Washington Baseball Club, has offered free the use of Griffith Stadium, in an effort that apparently is becoming city-wide to help the National Capital civic fund. The participation of Almas Temple in the opening night ceremonies is considered a factor auguring for the success of the event.

Admission to the combined Shrine demonstration and baseball game will be 25 cents per person, it was announced yesterday at the G. W. U. athletic office. Season tickets, good for 10 admissions at any of the events scheduled for the fund's benefit, may be purchased now at $2.000 each at the university athletic office, 2010 H street northwest, or at Joe Turner's office in the Annapolis Hotel.

Fund to Be Directed By Board of 25.

A good fellowship night and business meeting of the Grotto will be held at Grotto headquarters tomorrow evening, to which Monarch Wilken requests a large attendance. As usual, an entertaining program will be presented and candidates will be initiated in short form.

A dispensation was granted on April 6 for a Grotto at Fredericksburg, Va., to be known as Abaca Grotto. The dispensation was presented by Grand Secretary George Edward Hatch, of Rochester, N. Y. He was assisted in the ceremony by Past Grand Monarch E. W. Libbey, of Washington, and Past Monarch Chester D. Evens, of Samis Grotto, Richmond, Va. The new Grotto started off with a class of 53 candidates. One hundred members is necessary to obtain a charter and become a full-fledged Grotto, but the members insisted that they will have the required number in time to receive their charter at the supreme council convention to be held in Chicago June 27, 28 and 29. At an early date members of Kallipolis Grotto, of Washington, Yedz Grotto, of Baltimore, and Samis Grotto, of Richmond, will visit the baby Grotto.

If any one failed to get his money's worth in "eatments" Monarch Wilken would like to know. "All you can eat" was the order of the day and no one was denied. All in all, it was a jolly little party which the prophets and their friends enjoyed to the limit.

The grotto is planning for a ceremonial in May, the exact date to be announced later.

Past Grand Monarch and present Grand Secretary George Edward Hatch and Mrs. Hatch, of Rochester, N. Y., visited Washington last week, as did also Past Monarch Ralph Garvin, of Al Sirat Grotto, Cleveland, Ohio.

Security Is Special Ideal Advocated by D. A. R.

Continental Congress Will Be in Session in City This Week.

By VYLLA POE WILSON.

NATIONAL security as represented by proper national defense centered in our Army, Navy and Marine Corps and their air services will be the subject on the tongues of thousands of women who will gather within a stone's throw of the White House at the very time the representatives of other nations will be holding conferences with the President of the United States on international relations and kindred subjects.

There is a real desire on the part of all women just now, whether they belong to what is called the political groups of women or the patriotic societies, to do what they can to enhance international understanding and good will between the women and, of course, the peoples of the world.

But the women who will hold their conventions this week — centering about the Continental Congress of the Daughters of the American Revolution in Memorial Continental Hall—want that peace which goes with security as represented by the maintainence of national defense as agreed upon at the London conference, since they were told by those of the Army and Navy and Marine Corps, in whom they have confidence, that will assure national security.

Will Never Agree To Force Cut.

The women of this Nation who have given earnest thought to the subject will never be willing for this country to agree to reduce our miliary and naval forces even in the face of grim necessity for economy, which they all recognize is below the limit of national security. Most of the women of these patriotic societies are women who gave their husbands and their sons in the World War, some of whom never came back because of our lack of preparedness.

It is a matter of more than passing interest to note that in the foreground of these women gathering in Constitution Hall to insist on national security and national defense and to further the cause of patriotic education and upholding the ideals of the early founders of this republic, is the daughter of William Jennings Bryan, former Representative Ruth Bryan Owen, who is chairman of the program for the D. A. R. congress. She has listed a notable company of national security advocates to speak on her program.

Mrs. Roosevelt Will Get Laws Degree.

Educational circles are much interested in the announcement that a degree of doctor of laws will be conferred on Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt at the June commencement exercises of the Washington College of Law. It is of particular interest to remember that this college, in its early nucleus, was the battle ground for women in their determination to enter the field of law and has had as students and faculty most of the women who have made their mark as women of the legal profession.

Among those who are closely identified with the history of the Washington College of Law are Dr Ellen Spencer Mussey, who has written more bills and secured more progress in the freedom and progress of women than probably any other woman of the legal profession; the Assistant District Attorney, Pearl McCall, Judge Katherine Sellers of the Juvenile Court, and Judge Mary O'Toole of the Municipal Court. One of our most distinguished women lawyers, nationally and locally, Grace Hays Riley, is now dean of the Washington College of Laws.

Among the other recent First Ladies who have had degrees from colleges and universities conferred on them while they were in the White House were Mrs. Calvin Coolidge and Mrs. Herbert Hoover.

Bid to Attend Has Been Sent To Roosevelts

Notable Program Arranged Marine Band to Play; Bishop to Preach.

THE third annual Easter sunrise memorial service, under the auspices of the Grand Commandery, Knights Templar, of the District of Columbia, will be held at Arlington National Cemetery this morning.

A notable program has been arranged by the religious services committee of the Grand Commandery, and will include a sermon by the Right Rev. Warren L. Rogers, of Cleveland, Episcopal Bishop of Ohio and grand prelate of the Grand Commandery of Knights Templar of that State. The musical features will be by the United States Marine Band, under leadership of Capt. Taylor Branson, and the Masonic Glee Club, directed by Homer S. Pope.

Invitations to attend have been extended to President and Mrs. Roosevelt and members of their family, to the Cabinet officers, members of the Supreme Court and members of the Senate and House of Representatives.

The Knights Templar of the District, together with their guests, who will be the visiting knights from Maryland, Virginia, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, New Jersey and other States, will appear in their uniforms and regalia to make a colorful picture as they form in a processional through the winding roadways of the cemetery from the West Gate to the Amphitheater, where the ceremonies will be conducted. The procession will be headed by L. Whiting Estes, Grand Commander of Knights Templar of the District of Columbia.

Trumpeters to Herald Advent of Dawn.

Precisely at 6:55 o'clock a band of trumpeters stationed at the amphitheater will herald the advent of dawn, and thus will foretoken from the sacred hills of Arlington the rites and festivities commemorating in Washington and in the Nation as well the resurrection of Jesus Christ.

The program of Easter music by the Marine Band will begin at the West Gate at 7 o'clock and will continue until 7:10 o'clock, at which time the procession of Knights Templar will move to the amphitheater. The service at the amphitheater is scheduled to begin at 7:30 o'clock, and will open with the singing of the hymn, "Jesus Christ Is Risen Today," as translated from the Latin in the fourteenth century by Tate and Brady, and altered from Lyra Dividica in 1708.

The opening prayers will be by hte Rev. Sir Knight James Shera Montgomery, chaplain of the House of Representatives, who is grand chaplain of the Grand Commandery of Knights Templar of the District. The Rev. Sir Knight ZeBarney T. Phillips, chaplain of the United States Senate, will recite the Apostles' Creed and the invocation, after which the Rev. Sir Knight John C. Palmer, grand chaplain of the Grand Lodge, F. A. A. M., of the District of Columbia, will read the lesson from St. Matthew, xxviii: 1-10. Following will come the sermon of Bishop and Sir Knight Rogers. The service will close with a prayer and benediction by the Rev. Brother Capt. Sydney Key Evans, chief of chaplains of the United States Navy.

Ceremony Has Become National in Character.

In its inception the Easter sunrise service at Arlington contemplated a ceremony by the local Grand Commandery of Knights Templar which should be in the nature of a tribute to the honored dead of the order who are buried at Arlington. Immediately the event took on an interest and assumed proportions which made it something more than one of purely local importance. The service indeed, from the start, became general in its aspects and the attendance is from every walk of life in the Nation. The first service was held in 1931, at which time President and Mrs. Hoover were among the guests and visitors who numbered more than 10,000. Last year Mr. and Mrs. Hoover again were present, and although the weather was extremely inclement, more than 7,000 made the pilgrimage to the cemetery.

Anticipating a large attendance on Easter morning, arrangements on an extensive scale have been made to take care of the crowd. Soldiers from Fort Myer will assist the regular staff at Arlington. Ample parking space has been allotted on the Fort Myer reservation, just outside the west gate of the cemetery.

The religious services committee of the Grand Commandery, having the ceremony in charge, is composed of Eugene E. Thompson, chairman; William H. Harrison, Roland M. Brown, Arthur M. Poynton, Arthur C. Shaw and J. Claude Keiper.

There will be no social meeting of Court D. C. 212 this month, but all arrangements have been completed for the annual card party and dance Thursday evening at the Willard. The large and small ball rooms will be used. Cards from 8:30 to 11; dancing from 10 to 1 o'clock. Miss Mary Doherty, chairman of card party, assisted by Miss Mary Cummings, Miss Anna Hickey, Miss Katherine Keeley, Miss Mary Oliphant, Mrs. Mary Shanahan, Mrs. John Costello and Miss Kitty Ruppert, of dance, assisted by Miss Luella All, Miss Kathleen Hurley, Miss Agnes Ivey, Miss Dorothy Nesline, Miss Mary O'Connor, Miss Frances Pearson, Miss Romona Raley and Miss Ann Doyle, in charge of patrons and patronesses, have been untiring in plans to make this the most successful Easter party sponsored by the organization.

The Catholic Daughters will be guests at the dinner at the Mayflower tomorrow evening in favor of world peace.

The Rev. Ignatius Smith will be the guest of honor and principal speaker at the Converts' League meeting Thursday, April 27. The question box will be in charge of the Rev. Father Burggraff, C. S. P. The meetings are open to the public. Miss Florence Winter and her committee have arranged a musical program of great merit, to be given by students of Trinity College.

913TH WILL START TRAINING JULY 22

By A. S. DE AGRO.

The 913th Coast Artillery, Washington's only Antiaircraft Reserve Regiment, will be ordered to active duty for a period of fourteen days at Fort Monroe, Va., beginning July 22.

The number of officers authorized to be trained with the regiment is 5 field officers and 46 battery officers. Other regiments of the Reserve Corps to be trained at Fort Monroe include the 510th, 516th, 508th and the 622d Coast Artillery. According to a recent bulletin published by the commanding general of the Third Coast Artillery District, the first two regiments will have charge of the C. M. T. C. instruction. The members of these two regiments are now undergoing special instruction.

The C. M. T. camp will run from July 9 to August 8 and the reserve officer instructors are scheduled to be in charge from the opening of the camp, which will include the processing, until August 6. Each team will have charge for two weeks, but during the change of sections there will be two or three days' interval during which the instruction duties will have to be taken care of by regular officers. The authorized strength of each team has been set at 1 field officer and 21 battery officers.

To Have Unit Training.

The 913th Coast Artillery, which is composed entirely of Washington officers, will have unit training. It is believed that the number of officers who will apply for training with the regiment will exceed the number authorized and selection of those to receive orders will be made on a competitive basis. High preference will be given to those officers who take an active part in the inactive duty training of the regiment. Such reserve officers are better prepared and their selection is considered to be a reward for their efforts. Maj. Elmore B. Gray, the regiment instructor, has with the issue of the District bulletin, mailed all members of the regiment appropriate blank form for the training with instructions that they be completed and returned to him at local reserve headquarters.

The regiment is commanded by Lieut. Col. Robert R. Hendon, jr., of 3201 Porter street northwest. His regimental staff consists of Maj. Edward L. Potter, of 1701 Sixteenth street northwest, executive officer; Capt. William J. Darmody, of 4115 Wisconsin avenue northwest, adjutant; Capt. Albert W. Lynbrand, of 1223 Massachusetts avenue southeast, intelligence officer; Capt. John Caswell, jr., of 1726 Massachusetts avenue northwest, plans and training officer; First Lieut. John B. Walker, of 815 Eighteenth street northwest, supply officer; First Lieut. Floyd R. Benny, of 1703 Rhode Island avenue northwest, munitions officer; First Lieut. Linwood B. McCloud, of 614 Sheridan Street northwest, communication officer, and First Lieut. Richard S. Hulburt, of 3000 Dent place northwest, regimental surgeon.

Under Command of Rose.

The First Battalion is commanded by Leonard J. Rose, of 1841 Park road, and the Second Battalion by Maj. Norman W. Whited, of 2114 N street northwest. Battery commanders are: Headquarters Battery, Edmund C. Wallis, of 3140 Nineteenth street northwest; Service Battery is commanded by Lieut. Walker, who also is the regimental supply officer; the headquarters and combat train, First Battalion, Capt. H. E. Jaeger, of 434 Emerson street northwest; Battery A, Capt. John H. Gruver, of 2302 Thirty-eighth street northwest; Battery B, Capt. William R. Russell, of 3938 Upton street northwest; Battery C, Capt. Robert S. W. Walker, of 2222 Q street northwest; Battery C, Capt. Charles E. Aulick, of Winchester, Va.; headquarters, Second Battalion, Capt. Thomas H. Brown, of 633 Maryland avenue southwest; Battery E, Capt. Keith E. Schwinley, of 1711 H street northwest; Battery F, Capt. William A. Roberts, of 335, District Building; Battery G, Capt. Alfred S. Trask, of 1414 Sixteenth street northwest, and Battery H, First Lieut. Stanley McGee, of 1347 Nineteenth street northwest.

Other officers assigned to the regiment are Lieuts. Charles K. Brown, John P. Billingsley, Victor J. Samson, Ellis Klein, Garland D. Kite, Richard H. Van Denburg, Floyd B. Kidwell, Joseph H. Church, Henry J. Holt, Frank P. Lesquin, Theodore A. Janssen, Samuel C. Moore, Walton Y. Lightsey, Joseph H. Holmes, George R. Gause, Hugh H. Chelf, Frederick W. Willcutt, John F. Burns, Gilbert J. V. B. Costello Post Having Great Year

Commander Grant Given Credit for Increase in Membership.

Due to untiring effort and perseverance of Commander Norman R. Grant, the Vincent B. Costello Post is experiencing perhaps the greatest year since its organization. With only a portion of the current year gone, its membership totals 510 comrades, far ahead of other veteran outfits. The attendance at the regular semi-monthly meetings has increased 75 per cent over last year, the average assemblage this season being approximately 225 members.

Costello Post has a midget baseball team in the local American Legion League and is seeking some business organization to share sponsorship. The financial outlay is reasonable. Any business man or organization interested is urged to get in touch with Commander Grant.

All members are urged to attend the next post meeting Tuesday, at which time several resolutions drawn by a committee consisting of Elmer Reynolds, William Bock and George D. Frye will be presented for consideration.

Take-Offs and Landings

By HARRIS B. HULL

FROM the great mass of testimony assembled by the Naval Court inquiring into the cause of the Akron disaster one fact has definitely emerged: that the three principal witnesses, the survivors, did not all see the same things and, on closer examination, we find in one or two instances that each of them is not absolutely sure of what he saw.

And although this apparent lack of agreement among them, and their statements that sometimes seem to contradict what they have previously said, have raised unanswered questions in the minds of many people, it is not at all unnatural.

In the first place we are apt to forget that the Akron was a ship of more than 700 feet length and that what perhaps was the situation in one section of her was not the case in the other parts. While one part of her rested on the water another was pointed to the sky. While a girder may have buckled in one section the superstructure in another may have remained perfectly solid.

Furthermore, we are liable to forget that in those moments just before the crash, and just after it, things happen so swiftly that a stunned person thrown by a happy break of fate into the path of a passing steamer might not later be able accurately to reconstruct the events detail by detail, especially under any degree of cross-examination.

The court apparently is trying to get to one of two facts. Did the girders of the Akron buckle in flight or was she dashed into the sea and then ultimately destroyed? Working on this theory, the court obviously hopes to come to one of two conclusions. If the girders did buckle then there was faulty design or construction and material weakness. If they did not buckle then the error will probably be charged to personnel and no reflections cast on the airship. The procedure of the court has definitely brought this out.

But it appears to this column that in the procedure the court is splitting hairs.

It is not apparent to us that any tremendous degree of importance should be attached to the fact that one or two girders did buckle in the air preceding the crash. Excessive strain on the superstructure of the Akron caused it to break. Just as the airship is not designed to navigate on water into which she fell and was destroyed, so she is not designed to withstand the ravages of a gale in the air which started her destruction. Fundamentally, what difference does it make whether the wind and rain of the air crushed the Akron or whether she was crushed by contact with the water which she could not avoid? We know, and I think we knew before the Akron crash, that a dirigible will not and can not physically ride out a bad storm. The Akron encountered such a bad storm which destroyed her. It is drawing too fine a distinction to say that if a girder buckled in the air then the Akron was to blame, but if she fell into the sea then the error must be charged to personnel. Wind and wave are too closely related.

For example, let us say that you buy a $10,000 automobile, the best one on the market. After you have had it for a while you are driving it on a strange road which suddenly ends and you drive through a fence and into a roughly plowed field at a high rate of speed. The car is destroyed. Now, the body has broken, the framework that cost thousands of dollars is wrecked, although it was constructed of the best available material. Was there a structural failure? Certainly, but it was brought about by the application of a strain which the car could not stand. Isn't it apparent that it is futile to try to determine at exactly what moment the car was wrecked? The rough road and the plowed field did their work. Likewise, it is futile to try to sit down and theoretically analyze the cause of the airship disaster. The storm did the work.

The American airship program hangs in the balance of the investigation. The Navy knows that, and Congress knows it, and each is conducting its own hearings, with the latter group's deliberations to be of more importance because in its hands rest the purse strings which will allow or make impossible the continuance of dirigible construction.

Strange twists of fate that played such a dramatic part in the rescue of the three survivors of the accident were apparent in other ways that night off Barnegat Point. While, to a large extent, we learned what we know about airships from the Germans, it is significant that a German boat, commanded by a rugged German sea captain, pulled from the ocean waves the three men that were saved from the failure of the greatest of American-built dirigibles. And at the same time, from Cape May, N. J., next to the site of the old Cape May airship dock, where our early experiments in this field were conducted, the Akron rescue missions were centered.

PENDING the appointment by the Chief of the Air Corps of the commander of the Air Force to be concentrated this spring in southern California, the War Department has announced that a training test of Air Corps mobility and quick action will be made. One of the goals of the Air Corps training directive in time of peace is the ability to be moved and supplied on short notice. For that reason unit commanders are not being informed of the detailed plans nor the actual time for the movement of their units to California for the 1933 air exercises until a short time before they are to actually take off.

Not only will this test the effectiveness of past training of these units, but it will also test the initiative of the commanders of all air units from the wing commander down the line, in meeting the many detailed problems involved in getting their particular organization away from the home station on time.

For several weeks this spring the majority of Army air fields throughout the country will be lonely places, and the Army planes which ordinarily do their flying in the surrounding air will be doing their flying elsewhere. Those tactical wings, groups of squadrons of the Army Air Corps which are not engaged in the joint Army Air Corps-Antiaircraft Artillery exercises at Fort Knox, Ky., will fly from their home stations to some point in the United States where facilities exist to take care of them while they engage in tactical missions involving various assumed situations. Even the instructors and students at the Air Corps Tactical School at Maxwell Field, Ala., will be on the move.

"In order to afford Army flying personnel experience in handling their airplanes, or numbers of such airplanes, over different routes and varying terrain it has been the practice to shift the locality of Air Corps exercises from year to year," stated Gen. Douglas MacArthur, chief of staff of the Army. "The 1930 exercises were held in the Sacramento Valley, those of 1931 in the Northeast and it had been planned to hold those of this year somewhere in the Northwest. Due to the lack of existing installations under Army control to accommodate the contemplated concentration and training of 390 officers, 1822 enlisted men and 335 airplanes, tentative plans involving the Northwest were abandoned, as the need for economy favored a locality where a large Army field and a supply depot were present."

SILVER STARS READY FOR HERO VETERANS

Applications Must Be Filed With War Department by Those Cited.

Applications for the new silver star decoration, which is now ready for issue, are being received at the War Department, it was announced yesterday. In order to simplify the work of disposing of such applications, the War Department has prescribed a blank form to be used by those entitled to the decoration. This blank form will be furnished upon request to the adjutant general, War Department, Washington, D. C. Inasmuch as the War Department does not have the present address of the thousands of veterans who were awarded citations for gallantry in action, it is necessary for the veterans to submit their applications in order to receive this decoration.

No application for the silver star award should be submitted based upon a citation accompanying the award of the Medal of Honor, the Distinguished Service Cross, or by reason of the award of the Purple Heart or any foreign decoration. The citation to justify an award must be one describing an individual act of gallantry for which no other decoration has been awarded.

In reestablishing the system of military decorations in 1918 Congress provided that in addition to the Medal of Honor and the Distinguished Service Cross, which are the major awards for valor in action, each officer or enlisted man cited for gallantry in action in orders issued from the headquarters of a brigade or higher, United States force, would be entitled to wear a silver star 3-16 of an inch in diameter as the President shall direct.

When an individual is cited twice he will receive in addition to the medal, an oak-leaf cluster attached to the ribbon from which the medal is suspended. The oak-leaf cluster is the insignia adopted by the War Department to indicate the second or additional award of all decorations, only one decoration of a particular kind being awarded to any one individual.

Because of the fact that the silver star is intended as a mark of distinction for wear by the individuals cited, this decoration is not awarded posthumously.

WEST POINT BERTHS OPEN TO D.C. YOUTHS

Gen. Stephan Urges Young Natives to Enter Race Through Militia.

The desirability of encouraging native-born and long-time residents of the District of Columbia to compete as members of the National Guard for appointments to West Point was pointed out by Maj. Gen. Anton Stephan, commanding officer of the local guard units, at a conference with regimental and organization commanders last week.

Gen. Stephan pointed out that a number of boys attending local preparatory schools for West Point and who are not residents of the District of Columbia have enlisted in the guard to secure these appointments. He went on to say that he is particularly desirous that these appointments be retained for actual residents and for that reason is endeavoring to encourage the enlistments of Washington boys who are interested in entering the Military Academy.

Gen. Stephan pointed out that to enter the competitive examinations to be held next October it is necessary that a young man enter the local National Guard prior to June 30 of this year. Applicants for the examination must be between the ages of 19 and 22 on July 1, 1934. Any boys interested may secure further information from Gen. Stephan's headquarters in the National Guard Armory, Sixth and Pennsylvania avenue.

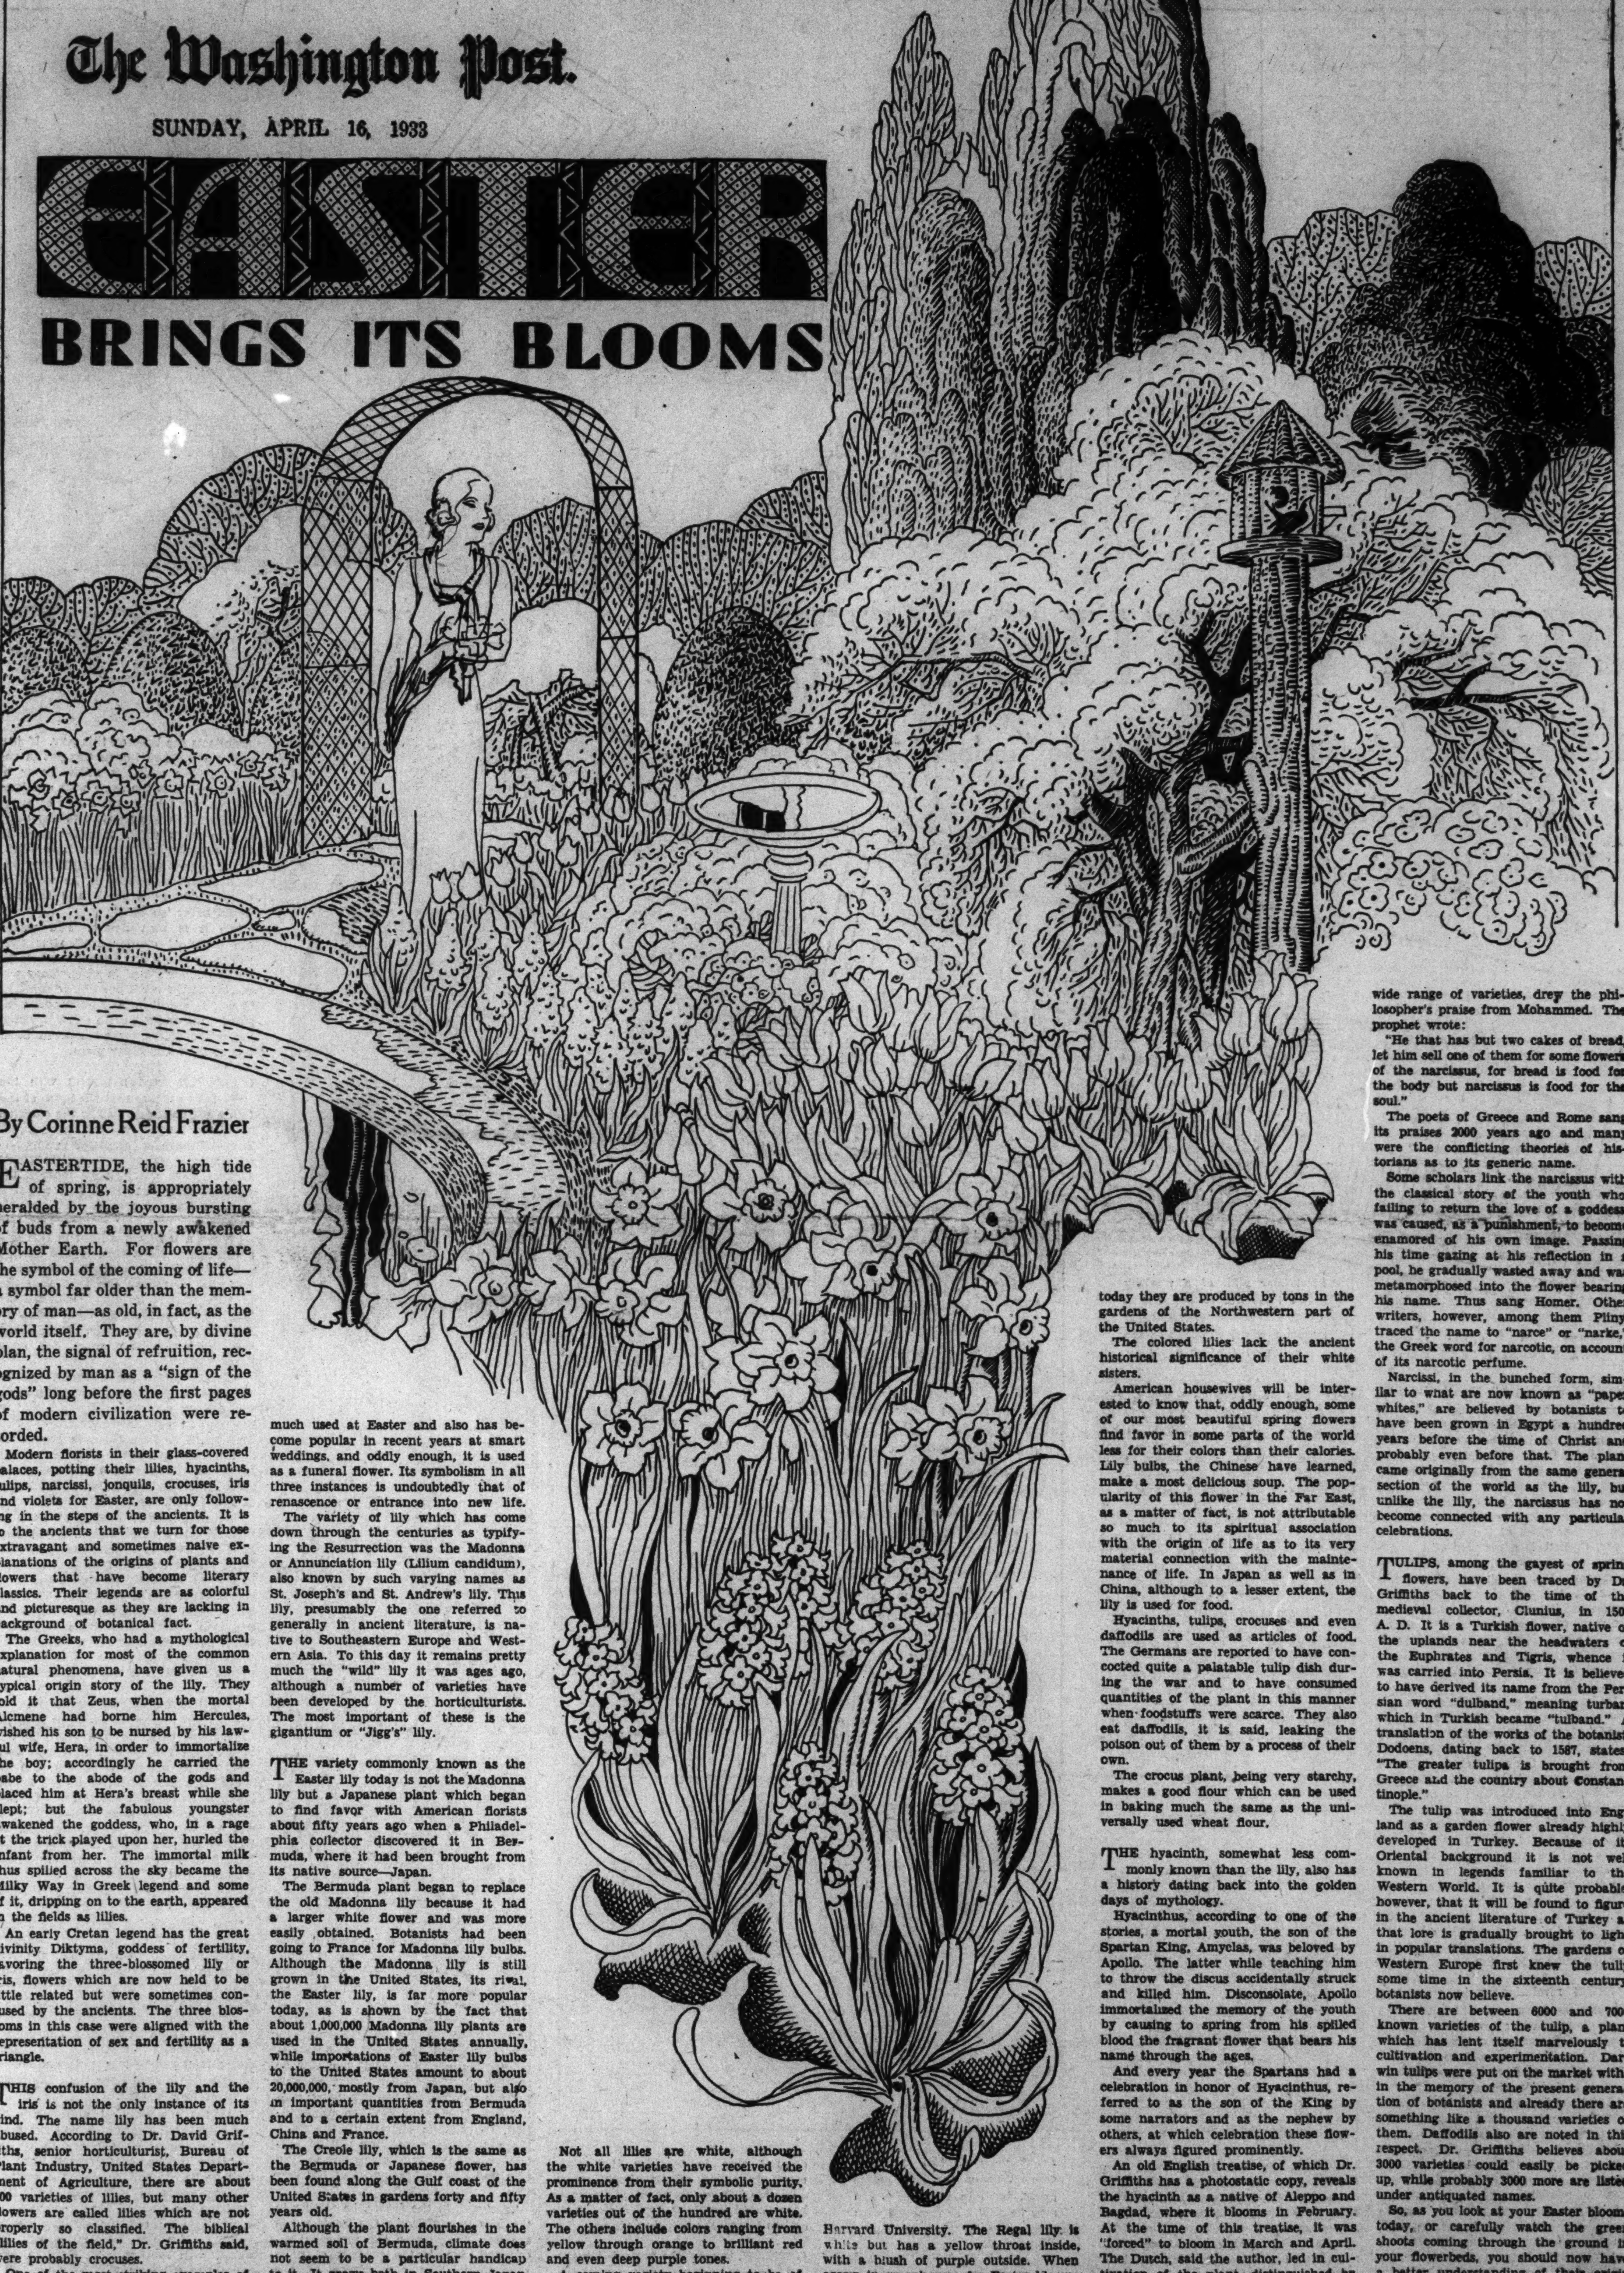
EASTER BRINGS ITS BLOOMS



By Corinne Reid Frazier

EASTERTIDE, the high tide of spring, is appropriately heralded by the joyous bursting of buds from a newly awakened Mother Earth. For flowers are the symbol of the coming of life—a symbol far older than the memory of man—as old, in fact, as the world itself. They are, by divine plan, the signal of refruition, recognized by man as a "sign of the gods" long before the first pages of modern civilization were recorded.

Modern florists in their glass-covered palaces, potting their lilies, hyacinths, tulips, narcissi, jonquils, crocuses, iris and violets for Easter, are only following in the steps of the ancients. It is to the ancients that we turn for those extravagant and sometimes naive explanations of the origins of plants and flowers that have become literary classics. Their legends are as colorful and picturesque as they are lacking in background of botanical fact.

The Greeks, who had a mythological explanation for most of the common natural phenomena, have given us a typical origin story of the lily. They told it that Zeus, when the mortal Alcmene had borne him Hercules, wished his son to be nursed by his lawful wife, Hera, in order to immortalize the boy; accordingly he carried the babe to the abode of the gods and placed him at Hera's breast while she slept; but the fabulous youngster awakened the goddess, who, in a rage at the trick played upon her, hurled the infant from her. The immortal milk thus spilled across the sky became the Milky Way in Greek legend and some of it, dripping on to the earth, appeared in the fields as lilies.

An early Cretan legend has the great divinity Diktyma, goddess of fertility, favoring the three-blossomed lily or iris, flowers which are now held to be little related but were sometimes confused by the ancients. The three blossoms in this case were aligned with the representation of sex and fertility as a triangle.

THIS confusion of the lily and the iris is not the only instance of its kind. The name lily has been much abused. According to Dr. David Griffiths, senior horticulturist, Bureau of Plant Industry, United States Department of Agriculture, there are about 100 varieties of lilies, but many other flowers are called lilies which are not properly so classified. The biblical "lilies of the field," Dr. Griffiths said, were probably crocuses.

One of the most striking examples of misnomenclature is the calla lily. This flower, grown in large quantities in California for export all over the country, is not a lily at all. It is an airoid. Because of its pure white beauty it is much used at Easter and also has become popular in recent years at smart weddings, and oddly enough, it is used as a funeral flower. Its symbolism in all three instances is undoubtedly that of renascence or entrance into new life.

The variety of lily which has come down through the centuries as typifying the Resurrection was the Madonna or Annunciation lily (Lilium candidum), also known by such varying names as St. Joseph's and St. Andrew's lily. This lily, presumably the one referred to generally in ancient literature, is native to Southeastern Europe and Western Asia. To this day it remains pretty much the "wild" lily it was ages ago, although a number of varieties have been developed by the horticulturists. The most important of these is the gigantium or "Jigg's" lily.

THE variety commonly known as the Easter lily today is not the Madonna lily but a Japanese plant which began to find favor with American florists about fifty years ago when a Philadelphia collector discovered it in Bermuda, where it had been brought from its native source—Japan.

The Bermuda plant began to replace the old Madonna lily because it had a larger white flower and was more easily obtained. Botanists had been going to France for Madonna lily bulbs. Although the Madonna lily is still grown in the United States, its rival, the Easter lily, is far more popular today, as is shown by the fact that about 1,000,000 Madonna lily plants are used in the United States annually, while importations of Easter lily bulbs to the United States amount to about 20,000,000, mostly from Japan, but also in important quantities from Bermuda and to a certain extent from England, China and France.

The Creole lily, which is the same as the Bermuda or Japanese flower, has been found along the Gulf coast of the United States in gardens forty and fifty years old.

Although the plant flourishes in the warmed soil of Bermuda, climate does not seem to be a particular handicap to it. It grows both in Southern Japan and in the north, which has a rather rigorous climate. Dr. Griffiths says it has even been wintered here in America in the extreme cold of Minneapolis under a very heavy mulch.

Not all lilies are white, although the white varieties have received the prominence from their symbolic purity. As a matter of fact, only about a dozen varieties out of the hundred are white. The others include colors ranging from yellow through orange to brilliant red and even deep purple tones.

A coming variety beginning to be of commercial importance in the United States is the Regal lily, which was imported twenty years ago by E. H. Wilson, of the Arnold Arboretum at Jamaica Plains, Mass., associated with Harvard University. The Regal lily is white but has a yellow throat inside, with a blush of purple outside. When grown in greenhouses for Easter blooming it is nearly white. Its natural blossoming time is June. According to Dr. Griffiths, practically all the Regal bulbs growing in this country ten years ago were controlled by one man, while today they are produced by tons in the gardens of the Northwestern part of the United States.

American housewives will be interested to know that, oddly enough, some of our most beautiful spring flowers find favor in some parts of the world less for their colors than their calories. Lily bulbs, the Chinese have learned, make a most delicious soup. The popularity of this flower in the Far East, as a matter of fact, is not attributable so much to its spiritual association with the origin of life as to its very material connection with the maintenance of life. In Japan as well as in China, although to a lesser extent, the lily is used for food.

Hyacinths, tulips, crocuses and even daffodils are used as articles of food. The Germans are reported to have concocted quite a palatable tulip dish during the war and to have consumed quantities of the plant in this manner when foodstuffs were scarce. They also eat daffodils, it is said, leaking the poison out of them by a process of their own.

The crocus plant, being very starchy, makes a good flour which can be used in baking much the same as the universally used wheat flour.

THE hyacinth, somewhat less commonly known than the lily, also has a history dating back into the golden days of mythology.

Hyacinthus, according to one of the stories, a mortal youth, the son of the Spartan King, Amyclas, was beloved by Apollo. The latter while teaching him to throw the discus accidentally struck and killed him. Disconsolate, Apollo immortalized the memory of the youth by causing to spring from his spilled blood the fragrant flower that bears his name through the ages.

And every year the Spartans had a celebration in honor of Hyacinthus, referred to as the son of the King by some narrators and as the nephew by others, at which celebration these flowers always figured prominently.

An old English treatise, of which Dr. Griffiths has a photostatic copy, reveals the hyacinth as a native of Aleppo and Bagdad, where it blooms in February. At the time of this treatise, it was "forced" to bloom in March and April. The Dutch, said the author, led in cultivation of the plant, distinguished by its broad green foliage, elegant bloom and almost endless variety of brilliant and beautiful colors.

The narcissus, synonymous with daffodil and including the jonquil in its wide range of varieties, drew the philosopher's praise from Mohammed. The prophet wrote:

"He that has but two cakes of bread, let him sell one of them for some flowers of the narcissus, for bread is food for the body but narcissus is food for the soul."

The poets of Greece and Rome sang its praises 2000 years ago and many were the conflicting theories of historians as to its generic name.

Some scholars link the narcissus with the classical story of the youth who, failing to return the love of a goddess, was caused, as a punishment, to become enamored of his own image. Passing his time gazing at his reflection in a pool, he gradually wasted away and was metamorphosed into the flower bearing his name. Thus sang Homer. Other writers, however, among them Pliny, traced the name to "narce" or "narke," the Greek word for narcotic, on account of its narcotic perfume.

Narcissi, in the bunched form, similar to what are now known as "paper whites," are believed by botanists to have been grown in Egypt a hundred years before the time of Christ and probably even before that. The plant came originally from the same general section of the world as the lily, but unlike the lily, the narcissus has not become connected with any particular celebrations.

TULIPS, among the gayest of spring flowers, have been traced by Dr. Griffiths back to the time of the medieval collector, Clunius, in 1500 A. D. It is a Turkish flower, native of the uplands near the headwaters of the Euphrates and Tigris, whence it was carried into Persia. It is believed to have derived its name from the Persian word "dulband," meaning turban, which in Turkish became "tulband." A translation of the works of the botanist, Dodoens, dating back to 1587, states: "The greater tulipa is brought from Greece and the country about Constantinople."

The tulip was introduced into England as a garden flower already highly developed in Turkey. Because of its Oriental background it is not well known in legends familiar to the Western World. It is quite probable, however, that it will be found to figure in the ancient literature of Turkey as that lore is gradually brought to light in popular translations. The gardens of Western Europe first knew the tulip some time in the sixteenth century, botanists now believe.

There are between 6000 and 7000 known varieties of the tulip, a plant which has lent itself marvelously to cultivation and experimentation. Darwin tulips were put on the market within the memory of the present generation of botanists and already there are something like a thousand varieties of them. Daffodils also are noted in this respect. Dr. Griffiths believes about 3000 varieties could easily be picked up, while probably 3000 more are listed under antiquated names.

So, as you look at your Easter blooms today, or carefully watch the green shoots coming through the ground in your flowerbeds, you should now have a better understanding of their origin and a wider interest in your own success, with the help of Nature, in growing something of beauty that gets you closer to Mother Earth.

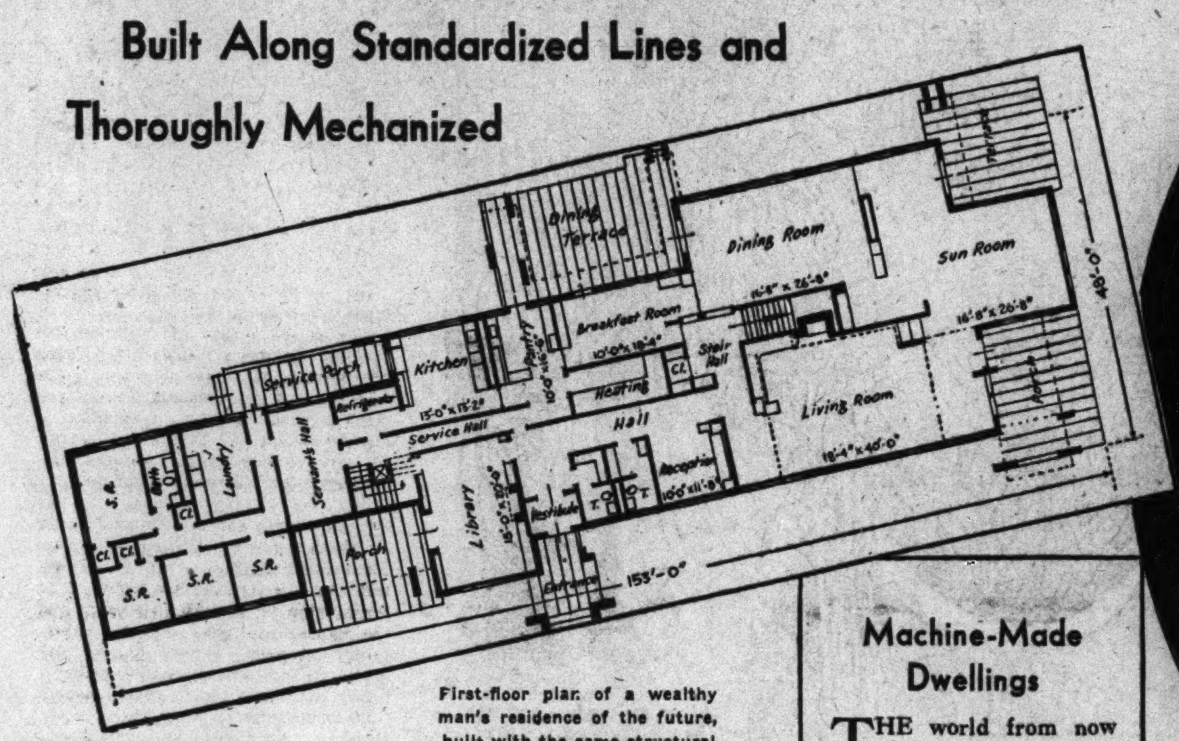
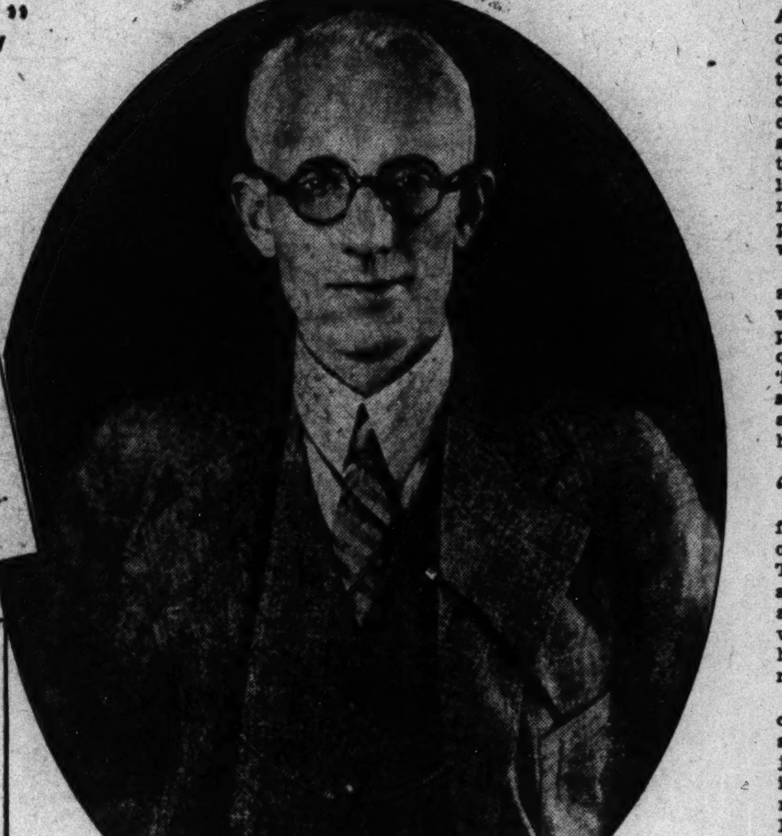
What Will "HOME" Be Like In 1940?

Noted American Architect Says It Will Be "Inclosed Space," Built Along Standardized Lines and Thoroughly Mechanized



First-floor plan of a wealthy man's residence of the future, built with the same structural panels that are included in the proposed simpler home



Harvey Wiley Corbett, famous architect, who foresees the mass production of homes to meet the present-day economic situation

Machine-Made Dwellings

THE world from now on is going to live, not by conservation and economy, but by intelligent waste. This will start the great plants, now closed down, to functioning again, and labor will be given something to do. The new type of home, part of this spending plan, will come into being in the next five years. It is inevitable, first, because our changing home ideals make it practical; second, because it is wise for us to take advantage of mass production in the most important thing we have; and, third, because the new home will start a new industry.

—Harvey Wiley Corbett.

By Carol Bird

"INCLOSED space." This is the name of the American "home of the future," christened thus by Harvey Wiley Corbett, New York architect, who designed the Bush Terminal. He also designed Bush House, London; Maryland Institute, Baltimore; the Municipal Group, Springfield, Mass., and skyscrapers and municipal buildings in many of the leading cities of the United States.

Mr. Corbett is a member of the Advisory Board, School of Architecture, Princeton University; associate lecturer at the School of Architecture, Columbia University, and member of the Jury of Awards of the Beaux Arts Institute of Design. He is chairman of the Architectural Commission of a Century of Progress, Chicago World's Fair, 1933.

Modern man's nomadic existence and his abandonment of the "old homestead," his desire to secure the perfectly equipped home for the smallest amount of money and the pressing need for an industrial revival have all combined, according to Mr. Corbett, to bring the "inclosed-space" home idea into being. This new home, which will be made in unit sections and ordered by catalogue direct from the manufacturer, will make its appearance about five years hence if the famous architect's prediction is fulfilled. It will be the kind of home, says Mr. Corbett, that only the millionaire can afford today, but it will be brought to the masses in all its perfection through mass production.

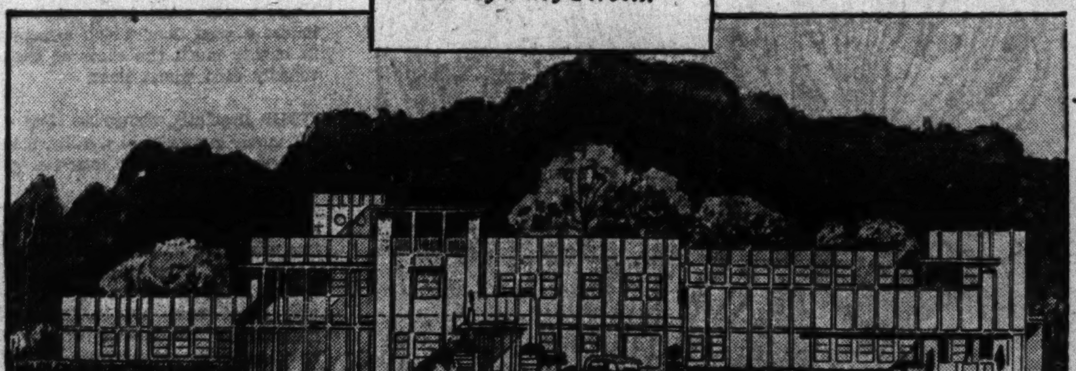
WHILE revolutionary in conception and appearance, it will not be the monotonous horror so many people imagine the standardized home to be, since its unit sections will be of varied type, and ordered and assembled according to individual taste.

"I became interested in the 'inclosed-space' abode for several reasons," said Mr. Corbett, who has had thirty years' experience in designing skyscrapers and Government buildings, as he pictured America living, in the not distant future, in machine-made homes, turned out by the thousands. "First, because the old-fashioned idea of home is gone. We regret it, but we must face it. It has vanished, because the home depended for its existence upon locality, upon keeping people together due to the disadvantages of covering distance. The home was the base of the family's activities, and permanence of location was a vital matter with people.

"Transportation has changed all that. The automobile has played its part in the transition. Localities are no longer local. Our most intimate family friends live within a radius of 300 miles of us. One thinks nothing of hopping into a motorcar and visiting them. And children are doing the same thing. Only the other day my own boy, on vacation from college, got into a car with a friend and went off to New Mexico to indulge in a bit of archeological work.

"No longer are children in the home at mother's knee. They are sent off to school at knee age. Flats, apartment houses and tenements have entered the picture. People are subject to continual shift. There is no longer stability about their places of business, and consequently no stability so far as a permanent home is concerned.

"Business organizations which used to be local have become national. A man sets his family up in one location, and after he lives there a year or two he is transferred to another city. He becomes manager, in a distant town, of a branch office of the firm, which has coast-to-coast affiliations. And after he lives there a year or so he is transferred somewhere else.



Front view of Mr. Corbett's conception of the rich man's home, built in sections which may be added or removed with comparatively little difficulty

"The home, as an old-established institution in which a couple's children and grandchildren grow up, has passed out of existence. The tradition of the home has been shattered. Whether this is good or bad is not our problem. We certainly cannot restore it. In view of all this, home has ceased to be what the word signified in the past, a 'rock of ages,' but what I now term 'inclosed space.' It is a temporary abode. Now, then, if we are making everything else that we use in the world by mass production—our clothes, our food, our telephones, our cars, our radios, our household supplies—why should not this temporary abode of ours, this 'inclosed space,' be a mass-production affair, with all the advantages to be secured through mass production?

"Why not face the fact that our modern home is no longer the 'old homestead'? It is no longer our base, the place we cling to during our entire lifetime. When we become ill, we are ill not in a spacious house but in a hospital, and when we grow old we face the twilight years in a nursing home. But, notwithstanding all this and the realization that everything we do and have are changed to fit the changing conditions of our lives, we shy away from the thought of the mass-production home. We do not stop to consider that since mass production affects almost everything we possess, it would profit us to have it influence our abodes—our more or less temporary stopping places.

"WHEN, to meet the present-day economic situation, taking into consideration the nomadic existence we lead and the necessary impermanence of our homes, we start producing houses in the mass, it does not mean that they will all be alike, for they will be built in unit sections, in an infinite variety of forms. There will be no monotony about the new 'inclosed space,' because each individual can vary it according to his or her needs. One tenant can have windows all across one side of the house, another need have but one or two; one can add a wing here, another a sun parlor or a porch around the entire place. Such a house will have an added advantage, for it can be made smaller or larger according to circumstances.

"If a couple with a large family moves into one of these homes of the future, they can order a few additional rooms sent to them, or add on a nursery. And the newly married pair can have these sections removed if they choose when they take over the place. People, after they thoroughly understand the possibilities of 'inclosed space,' will soon overcome the idea that it will be exceedingly objectionable to live in the same kind of house that thousands of other people have. This erroneous idea has handicapped the public in the past and prevented them from securing the benefits of homes made through mass production.

"THE point to be considered in connection with the new kind of home, which now sounds so radical to the average person but which will be among us in the next few years, is that you will be creating an inclosed space, ideal for living purposes because its mechanism will be perfect and its appointments profuse. And you will be making all these good things possible for the community through mass production. The plumbing, the refrigeration, the electric equipment, the light, the ventilation, everything will be perfect—modern inventions such as you now find only in the homes of the very rich.

"You will, in the future, be getting in the new type of home the benefits you are now enjoying in the motorcar because it, too, is the product of mass production. The convenience of the automobile has been put in the hands of nearly everybody. Why not the same with the perfect home?

"How will these new homes come into being? A strip of land in some suburban community will be used, and a number of these houses erected after the first model has been perfected. Architects are busy on this now. If just one of these new homes was put in the community's midst, it might never be taken up. It is the same with a suit of clothes. I might invent a suit of men's clothes which was superior to any other suit in many ways. It might snap on to the wearer, or it might have ventilating devices and so on, but if only one man appeared wearing it, he would be pointed out as a freak and the suit would never 'go over.'

"So it is with homes. Few people are made of pioneer stuff. But they will move into a new development, occupied by hundreds of families. They will quickly follow some one else's lead. The 'inclosed space' will first appear in small cities and suburban sections, which are, after all, better adapted to these homes than any other place.

"PEOPLE must not start with the false premise that the home of the future will look exactly like the old kind of houses in which they have dwelt. They will have to accept the revolutionary idea and grow accustomed to it, just as they have accepted all modern inventions of recent years, that the new home is actually new in every possible respect.

"When a family has lived in this 'inclosed space' for a time it will become a bit shabby and worn in appearance, just like everything else that we make in this world. Nothing fashioned by man endures forever. The ruins of Europe are an example. People say they have stood for years. But have they?

"The Pyramids are a wreck, and so are old European cathedrals, but they would have vanished altogether had it not been for the fact that millions have been spent to keep them in repair. It is the same with an auto. It wants to go to the service station once in a while. So it will be with the home of the future.

"When a tenant desires to have it refurbished or rehabilitated, all he will have to do will be to send to the factory for a service man. Service stations will be located at certain points for the convenience of the dwellers in 'inclosed space.' He will come and take away sections of the house which need attention, wash them, paint them, or replace them with new ones, while the family takes a little trip to Bermuda.

"IF THE property owner suddenly gets an order from his employer to move to Kansas City, he will turn in his home, after the fashion of a used car, and will be allowed a certain sum to apply on a new house, to be put up in his new location. He will send to the manufacturer, get a new catalogue and will receive a letter suggesting that, in Kansas City, he might be interested in Type B house, which has the very latest vacuum-cleaning system, which works automatically, or the newest wall bed, or some other gadget.

"The fundamental reason why I am interested in these new homes is not that I want to build houses, for my job is to design skyscrapers and public buildings. But I have long been interested in the idea of 'inclosed space' because I realize that in the United States we need, above everything else, some new commodity on which both labor and capital can be employed, and something which, at the same time, the great mass of people want.

"As for the physical appearance of the home of the future, it will not look like the conventional house to which we have become accustomed through long usage. It will be flat, not roofed, because space is important, and the level top can be used for a roof garden, a solarium or outdoor sleeping quarters. As for the interior, it will be warm, with radiant heat, dustless, because the windows will be closed and the air filtered, and noiseless, except for the noise that the occupants themselves make. It will, in short, be the ideal abode, the most perfect that can be produced, and at the lowest cost, because it will be the result of mass production."

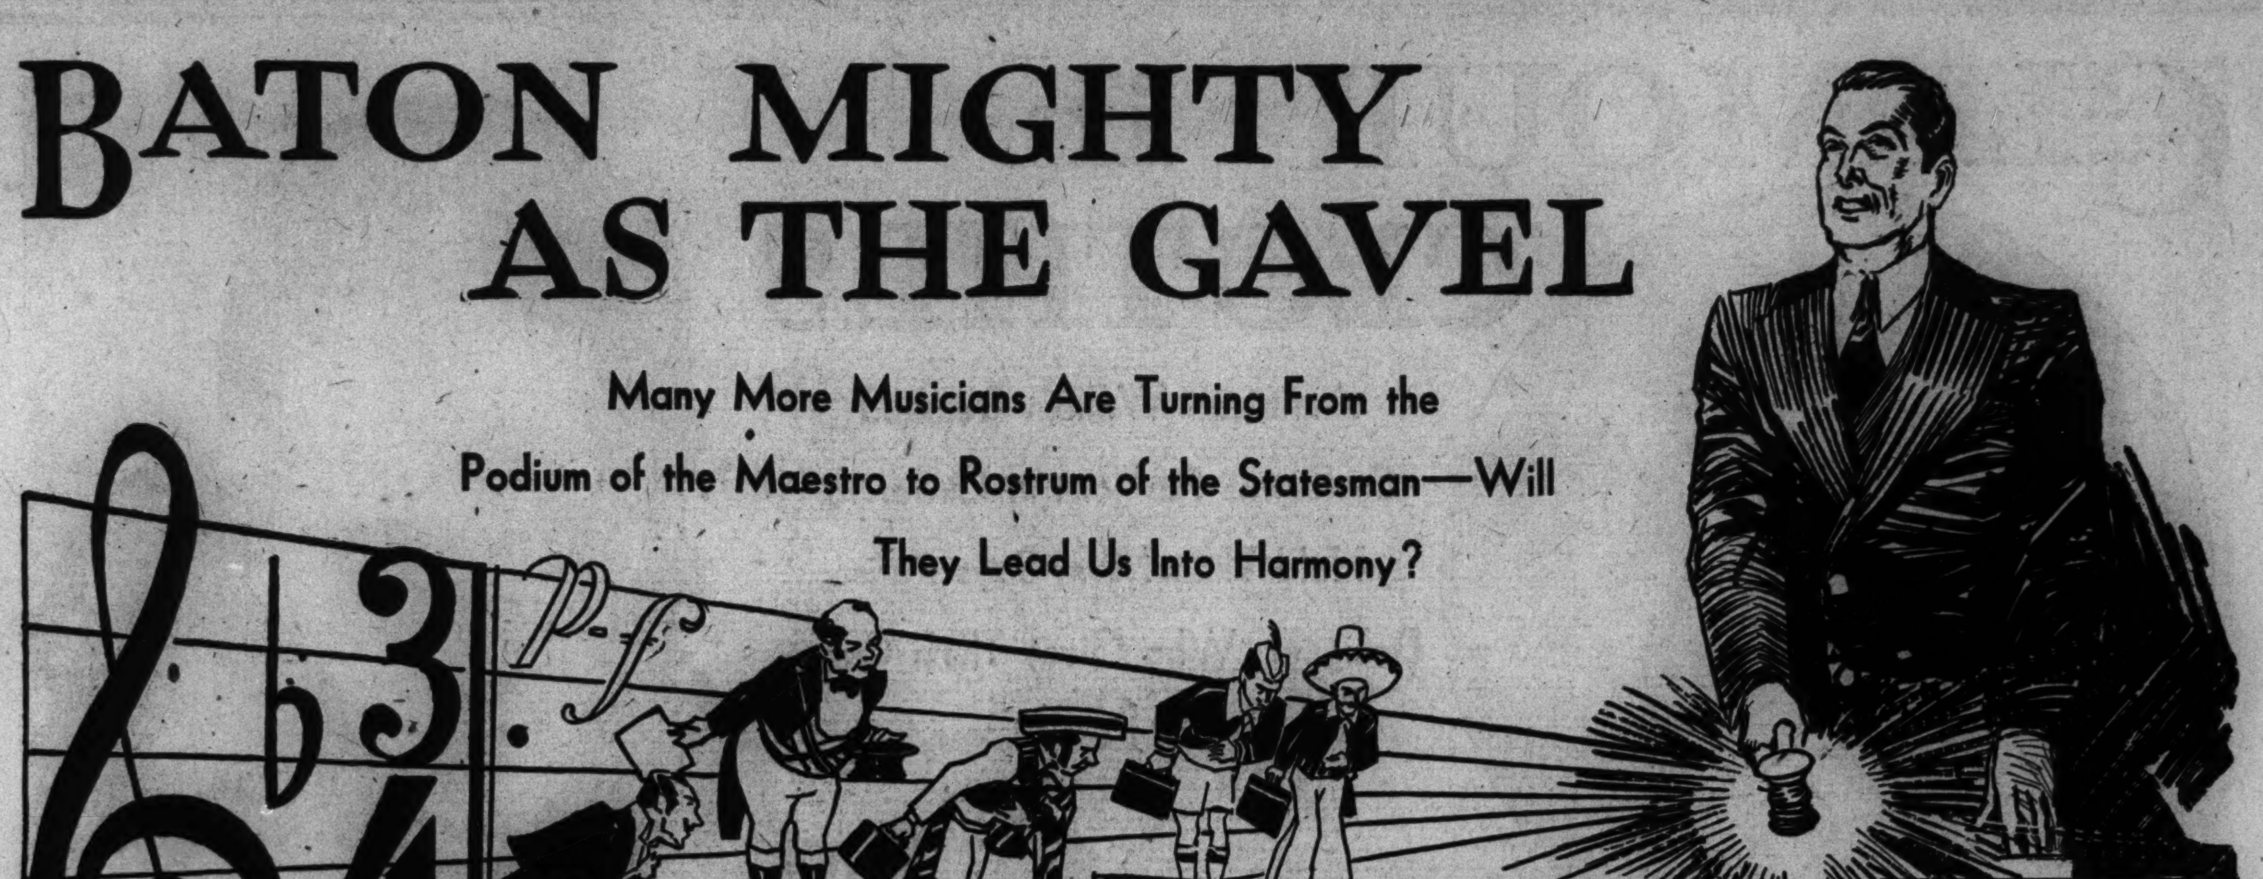
BATON MIGHTY AS THE GAVEL

Many More Musicians Are Turning From the Podium of the Maestro to Rostrum of the Statesman—Will They Lead Us Into Harmony?



By Charles W. Duke

> Wouldst thou know if a people be well governed, if its laws be good or bad?—examine the music it practices. —Confucius.

GAVEL or baton—jointly wielded by one maestro, gifted in the art of synchronization—they may soon lead the world out of the pandemonium of economic and political discord into the sweet harmony of peace and prosperity.

"Dough" to the financier means money, while "do" to the musician is the keynote of any scale. Blended in this turbulent era, they may yield a "sol" that will prove to be the salvation of the soul of humanity.

A survey of the world arena, into which emerge new leaders in national and international affairs, called to service in behalf of the distraught people of the earth, reveals the arresting fact that more of our modern statesmen are musicians, and, conversely, more musicians are finding their way into the mighty seats of statecraft.

It is as though they heard the words of the great Gladstone ringing down through the years in the lyrical declaration that "music is one of the most forcible instruments for training, for arousing and for governing the mind and the spirit of man."

Or, more recently, the voice of Woodrow Wilson, pilot of an embittered world in a martial crisis, in his warning that "the man who disparages music as a luxury and nonessential is doing the Nation an injury, since there is no better way to express patriotism than through music."

Tempo—a la F. D. R.!

IF THE tempo of the next four years is to be set by the Man in the White House in Washington, then it's step lively—and no more moanin' of the blues! President Roosevelt "likes the rhythm of rolling caissons and the gladness of cornet chuckles."

"Happy Days Are Here Again" was the battle song of his campaign.

At his inauguration in March the bands played a snappy march entitled "The Franklin D. Roosevelt March," written for the occasion by the Secretary of the Treasury, William H. Woodin.

The Chief Executive's favorites are "From the Halls of Montezuma," "Anchors Aweigh," "Madelon" and Wagner's "Fire Music" from "Valkyrie." And that—if you know your music—tells you that your new President likes action, color, rhythm and pep!

Nor forgetting the admonition of that mighty atom, "The Little Corporal," Napoleon Bonaparte, that "of all the liberal arts, music has the greatest influence over the emotions and is that art to which the lawmaker should give great attention."

JUST a cursory review of the news headlines discloses the identities of men long prominent in musical affairs, either as public performers or in hobbies privately pursued, who are taking up new roles in statesmanship.

Benito Mussolini, Italian Premier, finds solace from trying affairs of state as he prepares to play the soothing strains of a classic on one of his five violins

In Europe a famous artist swings from his place at the piano and rises to acknowledge the plaudits of a crowd that would make him President of his native Poland. He is Ignace Jan Paderewski, pianist and patriot, who furnishes the only recorded instance in history of a world-famous musician virtually abandoning his art at the height of his success and plunging into the political maelstrom.

Infuriated by what he deemed the wrongs done his people, Paderewski took Polish policies into his own hands shortly after the close of the World War. At the request of Pilsudski he assumed the duties of Premier and Foreign Minister in a coalition Cabinet, but remained in that post but a year. He gave $2,000,000 of his own money in his efforts to obtain for his beloved Poland a place in the sun of the new Europe.

TEN years ago he returned to the concert stage, announcing he was through with politics, but now he is being boosted again as a possible candidate for the presidency, while some of his ardent fellow countrymen, feeling Poland may eventually return to the monarchial form of government, avow the musical genius is the logical one to wear the royal purple of a King.

"Il Duce"—the great Mussolini beloved by all Italy—has a passion for music which he indulges in his moments of relaxation. Nero fiddled while Rome burned, but Benito, in the privacy of his studio, dreams of building the bigger and greater Rome while he gently draws the bow across the strings of his favorite instrument.

A student of Aristotle, whom he regards as "the greatest philosopher of antiquity," and of Plato, Mussolini avows he has learned from these ancient sages that the cult of music deepens the harmonies of the soul. At least five valuable violins are known to be among his sacred treasures. Friends say that when he has played for ten minutes he is so swayed by the soothing strains of the strings that his face pales and his eyes close while he gives himself utterly to the mood of the moment.

Paganini, he holds, was greatest of all violinists. Mussolini plays only when in the mood for music. One of his favorite expressions is: "Gypsies tell us that they hold the violin on the left side because it is the side of the heart."

Another famed European statesman whose "inner life" is given over to music is Edouard Herriot, recently deposed as Premier of France, following the collapse of the Cabinet due to war-debts policies. Leader of the Radical Socialist Party in France, M. Herriot has been a power in Parisian politics for years and will probably stage a comeback shortly in some new political role.

M. Herriot plays the piano, mostly by ear, and it is his favorite form of relaxation. He is a writer, too, and is now engaged in writing a life of Beethoven. As a compatriot facetiously remarked of him recently: "France is not a musical country and a French statesman with musical associations is a rare bird."

At left, Edouard Herriot, ex-Premier of France, is another statesman who turns to music for relaxation, choosing Beethoven as the subject of a new biography he is writing

The hands of the great Polish statesman and pianist, Ignace Jan Paderewski, who cast aside his musical genius when called to serve his beloved country as Premier and Foreign Minister

In the United States are many conspicuous examples of statesmen with a flair for music. Latest to be added to this list is the new Secretary of the Treasury in the Cabinet of President Roosevelt—William H. Woodin, of New York and Philadelphia, industrialist, capitalist and musician.

Few knew of his accomplishments in the musical world until the announcement of his appointment just prior to the March inaugural. Not even Tin Pan Alley, with its knowledge of who's who along the Great White Way, guessed that the man who wrote the music for "Dancing to Heaven With You" and "Spring Is in My Heart Again" was the same William H. Woodin who signed the fiscal reports of several of America's largest business corporations.

And now the signature that graced the popular melodies of the day is to adorn the currency of the United States that will issue shortly from the Treasury Department money presses in Washington.

A lot of fun has been poked at the new "Woodin money" appointee for his supposed "hot-cha-cha" airs. But, as a matter of truth, and as pointed out by Dr. James Francis Cooke, the eminent Philadelphia musical publisher and authority, Woodin's musical attainments are not of the Tin Pan Alley variety.

Among his compositions are five symphonies, a children's book of songs and various popular pieces far above the ragtime type. "Oriental Suite," one of his compositions, was recently performed by the Philharmonic Orchestra in Berlin. In February the Manhattan Symphony Orchestra in New York played a group of "Four Musical Compositions" by Woodin. They were "Chinese Magis," "The Unknown Soldier," "Souvenir de Montmartre" and "Tartar Dance."

Critics who had never heard of Woodin as a musical composer pronounced his work "as showing seriousness of purpose and a solid foundation of musicianship." This serious business of musical composition began only three years ago, and his first compositions were for the guitar. Such is the man to whom America looks for concordant orchestration of economic and financial affairs. As accompanist to the new President he is expected to improvise and transpose all notes—sharp or flat—until we have a new score from which all can sing "My Country, 'Tis of Thee" in completest euphony!

The new Democratic Treasury chieftain succeeds to the portfolio of music vacated by the redoubtable "Hell 'n' Maria" Charles G. (Charlie) Dawes, who, through three successive Republican Administrations, from Harding to Hoover inclusive, might have been dubbed Secretary of Music, had there been such an office in the Cabinet.

Before he was Director of the Budget, Vice President or Ambassador to Great Britain, this dynamic Chicago financier, with a penchant for underslung pipes and fortissimo expletives, had proved himself a musician of rank. Always a lover of music, a violinist and a composer of pieces he played "for himself only," he finally got one of his inspirations into print in 1921.

It bore the simple label of "Melody" but soon became a melody heard round the world. Fritz Kreisler put it in his recital programs. England, France and Sweden joined America in rendition of the Dawes piece. President Masaryk, of Czechoslovakia, said it was the logical successor to Dvorak's "Humoresque."

SINCE World War days General Dawes has been too busy to indulge further his genius for musical invention, but now that the G. O. P. has signed off in Washington for at least four years, and the banks have gone into the moratorium business, "Hell 'n' Maria" may break out into printed melody again.

Be that as it may, these modern statesmen are but following in the footsteps of their illustrious predecessors. Since the early days of the American Republic, while others have been debating seriously whether the pen is mightier than the sword, these music-lovers in the halls of state have been weighing the merits of the baton against the gavel.

George Washington knew and loved his music. At Mount Vernon today one may view the musical room with its old-time instruments. One painter dared to depict the Father of His Country playing the flute with all the intensity of a virtuoso. But any historian trying to prove the musical performance ability of the immortal George will have to get it by a letter to Francis Hopkinson in which the First President candidly admitted: "I can neither sing nor raise a single note!"

Incidentally, this same Francis Hopkinson, signer of the Declaration of Independence, Judge of the Admiralty Court in Pennsylvania and a member of the memorable convention of 1787 that gave the young American colonies the Constitution of the United States, was the first musician of high rank among American statesmen. Dedicating his songs to George Washington, he wrote: "I cannot, I believe, be refused the credit of being the first native of the United States who has produced a musical composition."

Thomas Jefferson was an excellent musician and a very capable performer with the violin. While at college, he practiced music three hours a day. Benjamin Franklin, an amateur musician, took great interest in the art and invented a contrivance known in his day as the harmonica—a series of bowl-like glasses, graduated in size, and mounted on a rod revolved by a treadle.

Little is revealed in history of the musical propensities of the American Presidents. Not until Warren G. Harding came along were stories sent out concerning the musical abilities of the American Chief Executives. With the first money he ever earned, the Ohioan purchased a "sliphorn" with which he attained eminence in the ranks of the Marion Silver Cornet Band.

Many members of Congress, yesterday and today, have been music-lovers. The late Nicholas Longworth was a great devotee of the art. Senator La Follette believes music "is one of the great mediums of personal expression, an outlet for our emotions, a source of pleasure and happiness."

If some of our greatest Americans were to reveal their "pet frustrations," they would probably incline to a love of music which they were unable to indulge because of the care and the grind of the business or political world in which they have been slaves.

GLAMOUR in CLOTHES

American Women Demand Seductive Fashions in Order to Hold Their Men, Says Paris Designer, Who Gives Them Credit for Being Best Dressed

Paris.

"SEDUCTIVE silks, rather than sense, has become the fashion cry of the American woman because she is frankly out to attract men," declared Annette Simpson, the only American woman couturiere in Paris. "It is why, regardless of time or place, one finds her dressed, coiffured and perfumed like a demimondaine. Any hour of the day serves as an excuse for a complete change of attire, be it for cocktails, bridge or dinner.

"The European woman dresses more or less to please herself. She wears plain, practical clothes which are suitable for almost every need. Her good frock is saved for special occasions and it would be unthinkable to her to keep changing all the time. Since her husband takes an interest in her wardrobe and goes to the shops to help her select it, she does not have to try to arouse his attention with her clothes.

"But the American man takes little interest in his wife or her clothes. He only notices what she wears when it is something striking or daring. If his wife wears a quiet, beige dress, he will not know she's around. Or he will tell her she 'looks dead.'

"Let a woman come along, though, who is vividly and seductively dressed and he will sit up and stretch his neck. So his wife wears dresses of exaggerated fashion, adds long earrings and overdoes the make-up. She has to look like an advertising sign to get the man to take an interest in her.

"That should not be. Woman, to be really beautiful, must keep abreast of fashion. There are two standards by which a woman may be judged to be beautiful, and it is necessary to recognize the distinction between the two. The first must be the harmony of poise of figure and a general appearance which creates an impression of perfection. The other form of beauty should be made up of an indefinite variety of elements—pleasant smile, soft eyes, clear complexion, a graceful walk and a charm of manner that is not artificial."

MRS. SIMPSON, who has designed for many of the best-dressed women of the Continent and America, is a dark, slender woman, with bright eyes and nervous, sensitive hands. She speaks quickly and vivaciously. With her tiny tip-tilted beret and chic suit, she looked typically French.

Mrs. Simpson was born and educated in America. At the age of 17, when she had already designed dresses for her friends while they worked her sums and wrote her themes, she made up her mind that she would become a power in the fashion world. While she was eager to be known as an American designer, yet, since American women wanted only Paris clothes, she recognized the necessity of first making Paris notice her. She came here and set about learning the trade. Not only the designing of dresses, but how materials were woven and dyed, how furs were treated and how fashion trends were established.

She finds that European women are easier to design for. They are satisfied to be dressed up in the very latest thing, regardless of its becomingness.

"But when an American woman purchases a frock, she is thinking: 'Will this make him look at me and not some one else?' 'How can I look like that other woman?' I know this is so," smiled Mrs. Simpson, "because it is exactly what they ask me when they consult me about a frock. For that reason, it has become difficult to design for the American woman. How can any couturiere hope to satisfy her demands for exaggeration and variety?

"On an ordinary Sunday night, you will see a woman dressed in a ravishing gown, cut high in the front and low in the back, with a corsage of orchids. What can she wear the next time that will make her look more dazzling?

"American women, en masse, are the best dressed. But they are losing all sense of taste and proportion. They must dress like a brass band even if it is for nothing more than a train trip. What they do not realize is that when a man constantly sees so many attractive, well-dressed women about him, he keeps seeking for something else. He does not know what it is he wants. It would pay the woman if she gave less attention to the man.

"I BELIEVE, as a matter of fact, that American women overdo this business of holding the man. It has become a game to him. The harder the woman tries, the more indifferent he is. Soon he ignores her altogether.

"The European woman is more clever in getting the man to work for her. She is a far better gold-digger than we realize. But she is so subtle about it that no one suspects she is 'chiseling.' A French girl would not, for example, get a man to take her to the most expensive place in town and then be afraid to eat for fear he would not take her again. No, she would say to him: 'Let us go to a quiet little place on a side street. I want to be alone with you.' And then she eats enough for an elephant.

"The American woman knows little of the art of gold-digging. She rather trains herself to be an efficient wife, mother, economist and wage-earner, all for the price of a wedding ring. When she buys herself an expensive bottle of perfume or an expensive gown, she has a sense of guilt about it. She apologizes to her husband and there are many quarrels about it. He just cannot accept her little fling as anything else than extravagance.

"The French woman, when she marries, expects to be taken care of in every way. She eats all she wants, buys all the clothes that her station demands and has no apologies to make for it. It is, in fact, her husband who brags that she patronizes the smartest hairdresser or couturiere in town. He takes pride in the fact that she is luxurious. When the American man gives his wife jewels and furs, it is usually because he wants to ease his conscience. He may have been neglecting her.

"At any of the smart gambling places in Europe, you will see the women in the most expensive creations and glittering with jewels. They gamble while their husbands look on. An American man would hardly allow his wife such a privilege. If there is any money to be thrown away, he is the one who must do it.

"The American woman is independent only on the surface. Underneath her brittle exterior she is humble—willing to be his slave. She spoils her husband and caters to him.

"If she wants squabs and he wants roast beef, then it is roast beef that is served. Everything is done to please the man, not as a person, but as a sex. The woman has carried it to such an extent that the man has begun to lose his respect for her. He makes no effort to please her. He is the one who is on a pedestal and who receives the attention and flattery. When he comes home at night, he wants to find his wife looking like a Fritzi Scheff, all fresh and ready to amuse him. If she is tired and exhausted, he'll complain about it or turn to some one else to amuse him.

> "AMERICAN women, en masse, are the best-dressed women in the world," says Annette Simpson, Parisian couturiere. "But they are losing all sense of taste and proportion. They must dress like a brass band even if it is for nothing more than a train trip. What they do not realize is that when a man constantly sees so many attractive, well-dressed women about him, he keeps seeking for something else. He does not know what it is that he wants. It would pay the woman if she gave less attention to the man."

"IN THE so-called fifty-fifty marriages, you will find that it is the woman who is carrying the burden of the relationship. She does it because she wants a home and children and a normal emotional life. But it is hard for her to achieve this. There are too many women willing to gladden the hours of the night for the man without bothering about a wedding ring.

"The result is that men are making more and more demands of their wives. They take everything they can get without trying to establish a harmonious relationship. I know wives who would do anything to have children. But they have told me that their husbands would not hear of it. They not only don't want to curtail their comforts, but they want their wives to give them all their attention, to pet and coddle them.

"You find women in the United States sending their children to camps and to private schools so that they can be with their husbands. They watch them and look after them as though they were nurses. It is the women who should be petted and coddled. They want to feel that the man to whom they belong is the master and protector of the family.

"The American women do not get much from their men. In fact, they are very little appreciated by them. I find that there are more unhappy, broken-hearted women in the United States than elsewhere. In Europe you can always recognize the American woman by the loneliness and hunger in her eyes. Her face is like a mask. She drinks and dances a good deal and travels about trying to forget herself. European women see this and do not envy her material possessions. They rather pity her.

"I believe the European woman gets more love and more respect from her husband. Her family life is happier, too. It is quite a common thing to see the man taking the baby carriage to the park, with all the other children clinging to him. In America a man with a baby carriage is almost regarded as a freak. He spends little time with his children and rarely takes them out.

"American women are so poor in love that it is a wonder to me it doesn't lead to trouble.

"Too many American women throw their energies into a job and try to be constructive. Their work becomes their love. They are mentally so keen and active and so interested in different things that they give the impression of being self-sufficient and independent.

"But the goal of woman is still a home and a husband. She is willing to do everything she can to achieve that goal. She makes it easier for the man to get married. She keeps her job and helps to pay the installments on the home. One would be amazed to find how many women give their weekly check to the installment man.

"I THINK the American woman is the finest in the world. She is not only more intelligent, but also far more honest than other women. She is honest to her job and to her husband. So much so that she is losing her glamour. It is costing her happiness as well.

"She tries hard, for example, to hold her husband, to be the sort of woman he wants her to be. Let him ask for a divorce, though, and she readily gives it to him. She even goes to Reno to facilitate the procedure for him. The European woman would hardly let her husband go so readily and so easily. One cannot imagine her saying: 'If you ever grow tired of me, tell me so frankly. I will never try to hold you.'

"America is the freest country in the world for men, and the most trying for women. There is, of course, a class of women who get everything they want from men and who give nothing in return. One hears so much of them that one thinks the country is overrun with gold-diggers. But they do not begin to compare with the numbers of women who earn every dollar they get and who even support the household. I find the American woman always thinks of her husband. Any moral, spiritual or financial help she can give him she is ready to give. Her husband's problems are uppermost in her mind. I know any number of women who have lost their life savings trying to assist their husbands in business or tide them over a bad period.

"There is no easy money for a woman. Give me Europe any time for easy money. The European man doesn't lose any sleep trying to figure out how he can get the most for his money.

"It is this attitude on the part of the American man which makes him difficult to work with in business. For instance, when I am in Europe, I design a few things and my work is finished. I am then free to go off on a jaunt. But when you start a collection in this country, you must always be on the job. You must work your head off designing and redesigning any number of gowns. Then you have to work to sell them. Further, there are so many 'bosses' around the place that it is almost impossible to come to an agreement. They don't know what they want and so much energy is spent in talking and arguing that there is none left for creative work.

"How can an artist do his best under such conditions? The American business man does not care. He is only interested to get the most for his money and keeps an artist to the grindstone.

"America lacks the atmosphere of inspiration, of respect for the designer as an artist. In Europe the creation of clothes for women is regarded as an art, and designers as artists get the special privilege of leisure and freedom which are necessary to the development of their talent. Here an artist is only a worker. Until the American business man changes his attitude, our artists will not come into their own."

SPEED

Of the five major air, land and water records, America holds but one, that gained by Gar Wood, right, when he drove the speedboat Miss America X one mile on the St. Clair River, Mich., at an average speed of 124.91 miles per hour. England holds the auto, railroad, airplane and motorcycle records

Will America Be Able to Break the Records Set by Englishmen? United States Has Captured Only One Major Event From Great Britain

By Myron R. Huff

WHEN Gar Wood, grizzled hydroplane builder of Detroit, drove the Miss America X a mile on the St. Clair River last September at an average of 124.91 miles an hour, he established a new world record. He accomplished more. He gained for the United States one of the five major land, air and water records, which may or may not be prophetic, for the remaining four are held by methodical, mechanically minded Englishmen and have been so possessed some time.

Speed standards, like other advances, progress in cycles. Less than a year ago Great Britain held the five major high-speed times—for seaplane, hydroplane, automobile, motorcycle and locomotive. Recently, Sir Malcolm Campbell, holder of the automobile record, boosted his speed at Daytona Beach, Fla., to 272.108 miles an hour, making this distinction more secure for his country, but the fact remains Great Britain no longer boasts a clean sweep. The hydroplane mark has fallen to America. Others may follow.

THE 1932 national air races at Cleveland indicated the aviation record, at least, even now may be in process of changing locale. When Major Jimmy Doolittle averaged more than 295 miles an hour in his Wasp-powered racer, he shattered a land plane record held eight years by the French ace, Warrant Officer Bonnett. America at present has no seaplane capable of taking British Flight Lieutenant G. H. Stainforth's honors from him, but the step between land and sea plane is a matter only of engineering—not a particularly long stride.

Stainforth's story is a red-blooded one. He was 32 in 1931 when he established the world seaplane standard of 408.8 miles an hour. He is a graduate of Dulwich, Weymouth and Sandhurst. After three years with the Buffs as an infantry officer, he joined the Royal Air Force in 1923, being posted to the high-speed flight in 1928.

Having won both rifle and revolver championships of the Air Force, he was assigned to the Schneider Cup tests of 1929, but his plane was not ready in time. Shortly thereafter, he climbed into the blue and broke the Italian Bernhardi's record, averaging 336.3 miles an hour.

England had twice won the Schneider event. One more victory and the trophy would be hers permanently. However, neither Italy nor America entered the 1931 competition, and English fliers had only to cover the course again to assure themselves the cup. A hollow triumph; the Britons determined to inject something more dramatic.

On September 13, Flight Lieutenant J. H. Boothman covered the fifty-kilometer course at Calshot at an average of 340.08 miles an hour, bettering Stainforth's speed by nearly four miles. It was too much for Stainforth. Although the weather was termed "barely safe," he took his Vickers-Rolls-Royce Supermarine into the air and between Lee-on-Solent and Hill Head averaged 379.05, his fastest lap being at 388.67.

A fortnight later he again took up the 2600-horsepower machine. For hours he had studied a chart of the course, going so far as to etch on his windscreen guide lines to assist him in picking up landmarks. He had changed to a new propeller of deeper thrust; he had decided on a longer start, a dive at a steeper angle.

The silver-and-blue craft was tipped 15 degrees from horizontal. Coasting down at 450 miles an hour, Stainforth roared into the measured mile. His speeds were 415.3, 404.1 and 409.5 in the three laps he chose for recording, an average of 408.8 miles an hour. If maintained, such velocity would have carried him from England to the United States in a bit over seven hours!

Stainforth is the quiet, scholarly, imperturbable type. Shortly after his record flight, when an accident in landing threw his machine upside down into the Solent, he calmly unbuckled his safety belt while hanging with head under water and was standing nonchalantly on a capsized float when rescue boats arrived. That's the type of man to be beaten if America is to snare the seaplane record!

The world's automobile record, 272.108 miles an hour, is held by another methodical, scholarly, scientifically minded Briton, Sir Malcolm Campbell, whose personality is curiously similar to that of Stainforth. At 49, his quizzical smile and dry humor belie the fact he has traveled faster by land than any other man.

SIR MALCOLM has lived adventurously. He did his first racing in 1906 on a motorcycle. In 1909, when flying was in its infancy, he built a plane, abandoning aviation plans only because he found the fad too expensive. He has driven express trains and sought buried treasure on Cocos Island—sought it, as have most men, without success.

When the World War came, Campbell enlisted in the Royal Air Force and served as a pilot throughout hostilities. His escapes from death have become legendary.

Campbell has long believed an automobile can be evolved that will travel 300 miles an hour. Two years ago, Campbell guided the low-hung, fishlike Bluebird to a record of 245.733 miles an hour. In January, 1932, Sir Malcolm returned to Daytona. For weeks the weather delayed him. Finally, in desperation, Campbell wheeled the Bluebird II on the ten-mile beach, and despite diagonal cross-winds blowing thirty-five miles an hour, traveled south at 267.459 miles an hour and north at 241.773, an average of 253.968. This year the weather again was bad and a November hurricane had gouged a dangerous curve in the beach, yet Sir Malcolm made two runs of 273.556 and 270.676 miles an hour, an average of 272.108, the first measured mile being accomplished in 13.16 seconds!

America has a task on her hands to wrest that record from England. The best speed to date by an American car was made by the late Ray Keech, 207.55 miles an hour, his fastest lap being at 220, more than fifty miles an hour slower than the Briton's mark.

Great Britain concentrated in a serious way on the world hydroplane record three years ago when the Miss England II was constructed for Lord Wakefield. She had been designed primarily to compete against Gar Wood in the Harmsworth Trophy races at Detroit, but first her builders planned to wrest from Wood the world speed record, then 93.123 miles an hour. The boat was given to Sir Henry Segrave, holder at the time of the automobile record.

Segrave established a new mark of 98.76 miles an hour on Lake Windermere, England. Then came disaster. The crack hydroplane struck a floating tree branch, ripping out her bottom. Segrave and one of his mechanics were killed.

In March, 1931, Wood climbed into the Miss America IX at Miami Beach and attained a speed of 102.256. Again the battle was on. Lord Wakefield had the Miss England repaired. He gave the boat to Kaye Don, who shared with Campbell the honor of being one of England's greatest racing drivers.

Don took the boat to Parana, Argentina, and thirteen days after Wood's latest achievement, boosted the speed to 103.49 miles an hour. In July, 1931, Don guided the boat to still another record at Lake Garda, Italy, 110.223 miles an hour.

The winter season arrived, but in February, 1932, Wood again went to Miami Beach and, using the old Miss America IX, reached a speed of 111.71 miles an hour.

Meantime, Lord Wakefield had the Miss England III under construction. On July 18, Don roared over the nautical mile at 119.81 miles an hour on Loch Lomond, Scotland's famous lake.

Wood now had a new boat, the Miss America X, but contented himself with tuning her for the Harmsworth event. Don brought the world recordholder to America. The sorry showing of the English boat is too recent to require recapitulation. Wood retained the cup. Don returned abroad.

A fortnight after the races, Wood and his mechanic, Orlin Johnson, climbed into the Miss America X on the St. Clair River at Algonac, Mich., and, running upstream, attained a speed of 124.41 and downstream a mark of 125.42. The average of 124.91 represents the newest hydroplane record.

WOOD'S life story is as colorful as that of any of the British recordholders. His early career was like that of Henry Ford. Twenty years ago he was a mechanic in a St. Paul, Minn., garage. He conceived the idea of a hydraulic hoist for motortrucks. Today he manufactures hoists and speedboats, doing a business measured in millions.

He won the Harmsworth Trophy in a test at Cowes, England, in 1920. Each year since, in a speedier boat, he has retained it against all aggressors.

At 50, Garfield A. Wood is a lean, blue-eyed, keen-looking individual of the scientific type, the contour of whose face reminds one, somehow, of an Indian character from Fenimore Cooper.

His most thrilling race, surprising enough, was not in a speedboat at all; it was a brush between his father's ferryboat and that of one Captain Wes Mann on Lake Osakis, Minnesota, in which, because his father's craft ran short of fuel, chairs and tables were broken up and fed to the furnaces in a wild, desperate—and successful—attempt to win. That's the type of man Gar Wood is. The man to beat him will have to be better, and he'll be difficult to find.

In the second of the major land vehicle records, that for motorcycles, Great Britain again stands at the head of the list. Using a super-charged motorcycle, "Speedy" Wright raced over the Pendine Sands early last summer at a speed of 157 miles an hour.

American motorcycle men are loath to admit this as a world's record, averring Wright's machine was a "freak," of unlimited piston displacement, and built solely for such a test. They point to standard equipment as the only real basis for comparison and submit the 1926 marks of Johnny Seymour, 28-year-old Springfield, Mass., motorcycle and auto racer, who roared over the Daytona Beach sands, covering a kilometer in 19.344 seconds—115.63 miles an hour—in a machine with a 30.5 cubic-inch motor and a kilometer in 16.378 seconds—136.58 miles an hour—in a machine with a 61-cubic-inch motor.

THE fact remains, however, that Wright's 157 miles an hour represents the fastest time ever made on a motorcycle—and it is a British achievement.

In the matter of passenger train speeds, where the run was sustained over a period of more than 100 miles and for longer than an hour, England again must be credited with the world record. In July, 1904, the La France, a locomotive built in France for the Great Western Railway, pulled a 120-ton train from Paddington to Bristol, 118.5 miles, in one hour and twenty-four minutes, an average of 84.6 miles per hour.

The nearest approach to this mark is represented in the Congressional Limited, which daily averages around eighty miles an hour between Washington and New York.

American trains have traveled much faster, but for only a few minutes, and such marks cannot be accepted as world standard.

In March, 1901, a train on the Plant System ran from Fleming to Jacksonville, five miles, in two minutes thirty seconds, an average of 120 miles an hour, and in July, 1904, a Reading system train sped from Egg Harbor to Brigantine Junction, N. J., four and eight-tenths miles, in two minutes thirty seconds, an average of 115.20 miles an hour.

AUTO THIEF ON THE RUN

Police of American Metropolitan Cities Are Learning How to Thwart "Rings" That Have Stolen Property Worth Millions of Dollars Every Year

A specially posed photograph showing how a thief, appearing to be tinkering with the engine, is actually attaching a device which enables him to start a car with locked ignition

Careless drivers park their cars unlocked, feeling that, in the event of theft, they are amply protected by insurance

By Henry F. Woods, Jr.

THE era of racketeering which America has experienced in the last decade has focused public attention on the more glamorous of our criminals. In placing the searchlight on bootleg overlords, bold bank and payroll bandits, stick-up artists and gangs of kidnappers, people have placed in eclipse the activities of some of the more successful types of crooks.

The housebreaker, the forger, the confidence man and the robber have not been idle while these other individuals have been grabbing off the front pages of the newspapers. And in particular the automobile thief has managed to carry on quite successfully, even if his work has not brought him to the editorial recognition of his contemporaries in other branches of criminal activity.

Records show that more than $100,000,000 worth of automobiles are stolen annually. The technique of the men who perform these crimes has been advanced substantially in recent years. The automobile crooks have become experts. In many cases they have organized into rings, with spotters to locate cars, drivers to steal them, mechanics to change completely their appearance and sales organizations to dispose of them at an adequate profit. These men are not the low-browed, bull-necked, tough-looking type. They are smooth, dapper, glib and efficient craftsmen in a highly profitable crooked enterprise.

"They're clever fellows, these automobile crooks," says Captain Edward Dillon, head of the New York Police Department's automobile squad. "They know their business. Of course, they have certain advantages not enjoyed by other thieves. The greatest of these is that they work a game in which the loot carries the thief. In practically all other cases of theft the crooks have to carry the loot. This one fact gives them a big jump. It would be hard to find anything more mobile than a motorcar. Steal it, and it carries you away from the scene of the crime; and if it's a good car it will get you miles away in a few minutes."

CAPTAIN DILLON is the nemesis of automobile thieves. Not only does he head the New York automobile squad, but he also is nationally recognized as an authority on this particular criminal activity. He is consulted by police of other cities on automobile thefts. He is a lecturer on the subject at the New York Police Academy.

"Don't think these automobile crooks are mugs or thugs like the old-fashioned crooks," Captain Dillon explains. "They're not. They're downright clever. Most of them don't look any more like crooks than a bunch of office workers do. These lads are smart, and to catch them and keep ahead of them we have had to be smarter than they are.

"The modern automobile thief doesn't just go out and swipe the first car he sees. He studies his market. You won't find him stealing six-cylinder touring cars when the demand is for eight-cylinder sedans. He knows what the public is buying. Let a certain make or model of automobile become popular with motorcar buyers, and you'll soon find the crooks swiping only these models and makes.

"Of course, here and there an amateur or a boob takes anything he can get. But the real experts confine their thefts to popular makes and models which they know will find a ready sale.

"The automobile thief who really knows his business is not just a chauffeur or a mechanic. The real experts are often experts on locks. Again they are clever forgers who can duplicate a motor vehicle registration permit as ingeniously as the old-time penman could forge a check. They are also good salesmen. In the big rings the master minds are often possessed of genuine business and organizing ability who are wasting their talents on dishonest enterprises.

"Of course, I am not including the young joyriders. Every city has its quota of youngsters who steal a car and abandon it after taking a joyride. These crooks are not clever. They're just dishonest. The pity of it is, though, that often they get the wrong idea of what an easy racket this is. They steal a car for a joyride, abandon it, find out they are getting away with it, and from that point on it is not a big jump to stealing a car for profit.

"But the 'big shots' in the business are fast, clever workers and shrewd thieves. We have them on the run today, but only because we have first given them credit for being smart. We don't underestimate their abilities. We keep up with them by trying to be just a little smarter than they are. After all, they are like every other crook in one particular—they usually leave a loophole somewhere or other. They get caught sooner or later. Even the master minds land in jail in the course of time."

Foiling the Auto Thief

NEVER leave your car parked without making sure that every door is carefully locked and that all the windows are closed tightly.

When you buy a "used" car from other than a reputable dealer, be sure to look for the engine and body serial numbers and make sure that they have not been ground off and new numbers substituted.

Be sure that you have a legitimate bill of sale and that it accurately states the description of the car you are buying from a total stranger.

THE average motorist who parks his car on the streets is careless. Usually he takes the key out of the ignition lock and fails to lock the doors. Now and then he locks the doors and leaves one window slightly open. He forgets that the clever crook can take his car without the use of an ignition key.

This is done by using what is known as a "jumper," a compact device which can be attached in a minute or two and which makes the use of a key unnecessary. The automobile thief carries this with him and hooks it up in a jiffy. Any one seeing him connecting the "jumper" would think that he was just a driver tinkering with his engine or priming the carburetor.

"If every motorist would take care not only to lock his car when he parks it but also to close all the windows, automobile thefts would be cut down appreciably," Captain Dillon pointed out. "Not that the clever thief can't break the lock on the door. He can—and does quite often. But an unlocked car is an invitation and a temptation to the crook.

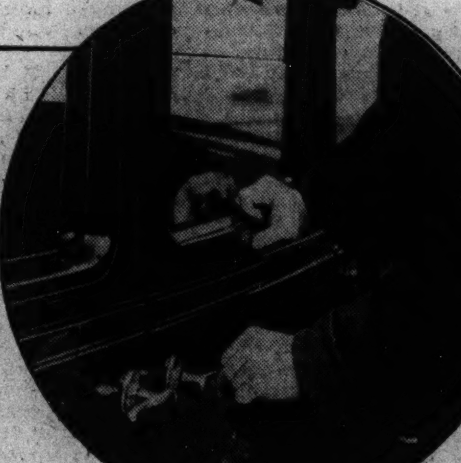
"Many drivers feel that they are insured and that theft of their car won't cause them any loss. This attitude is all wrong. In the first place, it's not fair, either to motorists in general or to the insurance companies. The more cars that are stolen, the higher the rate for automobile theft insurance. The motorists pay for their neglect in the long run.

"The other angle to this is that when a car is stolen the loss is not settled immediately. In the meantime, the motorist must go along without the use of his car. Automobile owners should realize these things and be a little more careful. They should not invite the theft of their cars. They have it within their power to cut down the tremendous loss from automobile thefts each year."

The disposal of stolen cars is not so difficult as it may seem. The crook usually drives the car to a distant garage, frequently in an outlying section. There he gets to work on it at once to remove all identifying marks. He may repaint it entirely. He may substitute wire wheels for wood wheels, or vice versa. He may grind off all engine numbers and serial numbers, put slip covers on the upholstery, straighten out dents and other identifying marks.

Once this has been done, the car may be driven to another State. The little black roadster which is stolen today in Memphis may be sold next week in St. Louis as a maroon roadster. The sedan with wire wheels stolen in Detroit may be sold in Chicago with wood wheels. In some cases stolen cars are exported. At one time an extensive ring operated in stealing cars for export. Many cars stolen in New York were sold in Berlin and in Havana and Canadian cities. This ring was caught and broken up. Its headquarters in Hoboken boxed and crated automobiles for export and operated as efficiently and expeditiously as any legitimate business enterprise.

Because of the large number of automobiles registered in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and other large cities, and the congestion and crowds, these cities have a large number of motorcar thefts. One of the cleverest crooks working in New York used his wife and young daughter as decoys. His game was to drive a car of a certain popular make and model. He kept driving until he spotted a similar car. Then he parked in front of or behind this car, alighted from his own car and went into the nearest building.



Locking a car and neglecting to close all windows is another offense committed by many drivers which helps to add to the number of auto thefts annually

In a few minutes he and his wife and youngster would emerge and make not for his car, but for the one next to it. This man was an expert on locks. He would pull a bunch of keys out of his pocket and with a few deft twists and turns would unlock the car, jump in it and drive off, accompanied by his wife and child.

He usually drove to within several blocks of an automobile auction room. He would then park the car and separate from his family, journeying on foot to the auction room. Here he waited for the bidding to start on a make of car similar to that he had just stolen. When he saw a bidder trying to get this car he would amble toward him and strike up a conversation.

"Pardon me, sir," he would say, in a mild, cultured voice, "I notice that you bid on a Blank Six. I don't like to trouble you, but I just thought I'd let you know about my car. I own a Blank Six that's in good condition. I've given it splendid care, but now I have to let it go. Baby's sick and we have to go out West to live with my wife's folks. The car's up the block if you want to look at it and try it out."

Usually this thief offered the car at a figure considerably under its real value. The buyer would see a good chance to pick up a bargain. Not for a minute would he suspect this gentle-voiced young man. And why should he? His story was plausible! He would insist on an original bill of sale and a proper motor vehicle registration certificate to cover the transfer provisions.

JUST how the police get the automobile thieves is a police secret. Their methods of detection are not made public, for obvious reasons. One way in which they get news of automobile thieves is through watching the so-called "share-expense" tours. This is the racket whereby innocent travelers between the larger cities are urged to "share the expenses" of motorists traveling in the same direction as they are.

Usually the motorist never reaches his destination. If he does, it costs him more than it should. The favorite method of these racketeers is to load up their cars with travelers who have agreed in advance to split up the expenses of the trip. Once under way, the car breaks down at a prearranged spot. Along comes a mechanic in an old flivver. The driver seeks his aid. The mechanic looks the car over, shakes his head and says that the repairs will take four hours.

The driver appears doleful and informs his companions, reminding them that they are to share all expenses and that the cost of repairing the car is an expense. The passengers leave the car and are told to come back in four hours. When they come back the car is gone. If they insist on remaining, they are forced to pay for repairs which are never actually effected.

By keeping an eye on these ventures the police have been able to get a number of stolen cars which are employed in this racket.

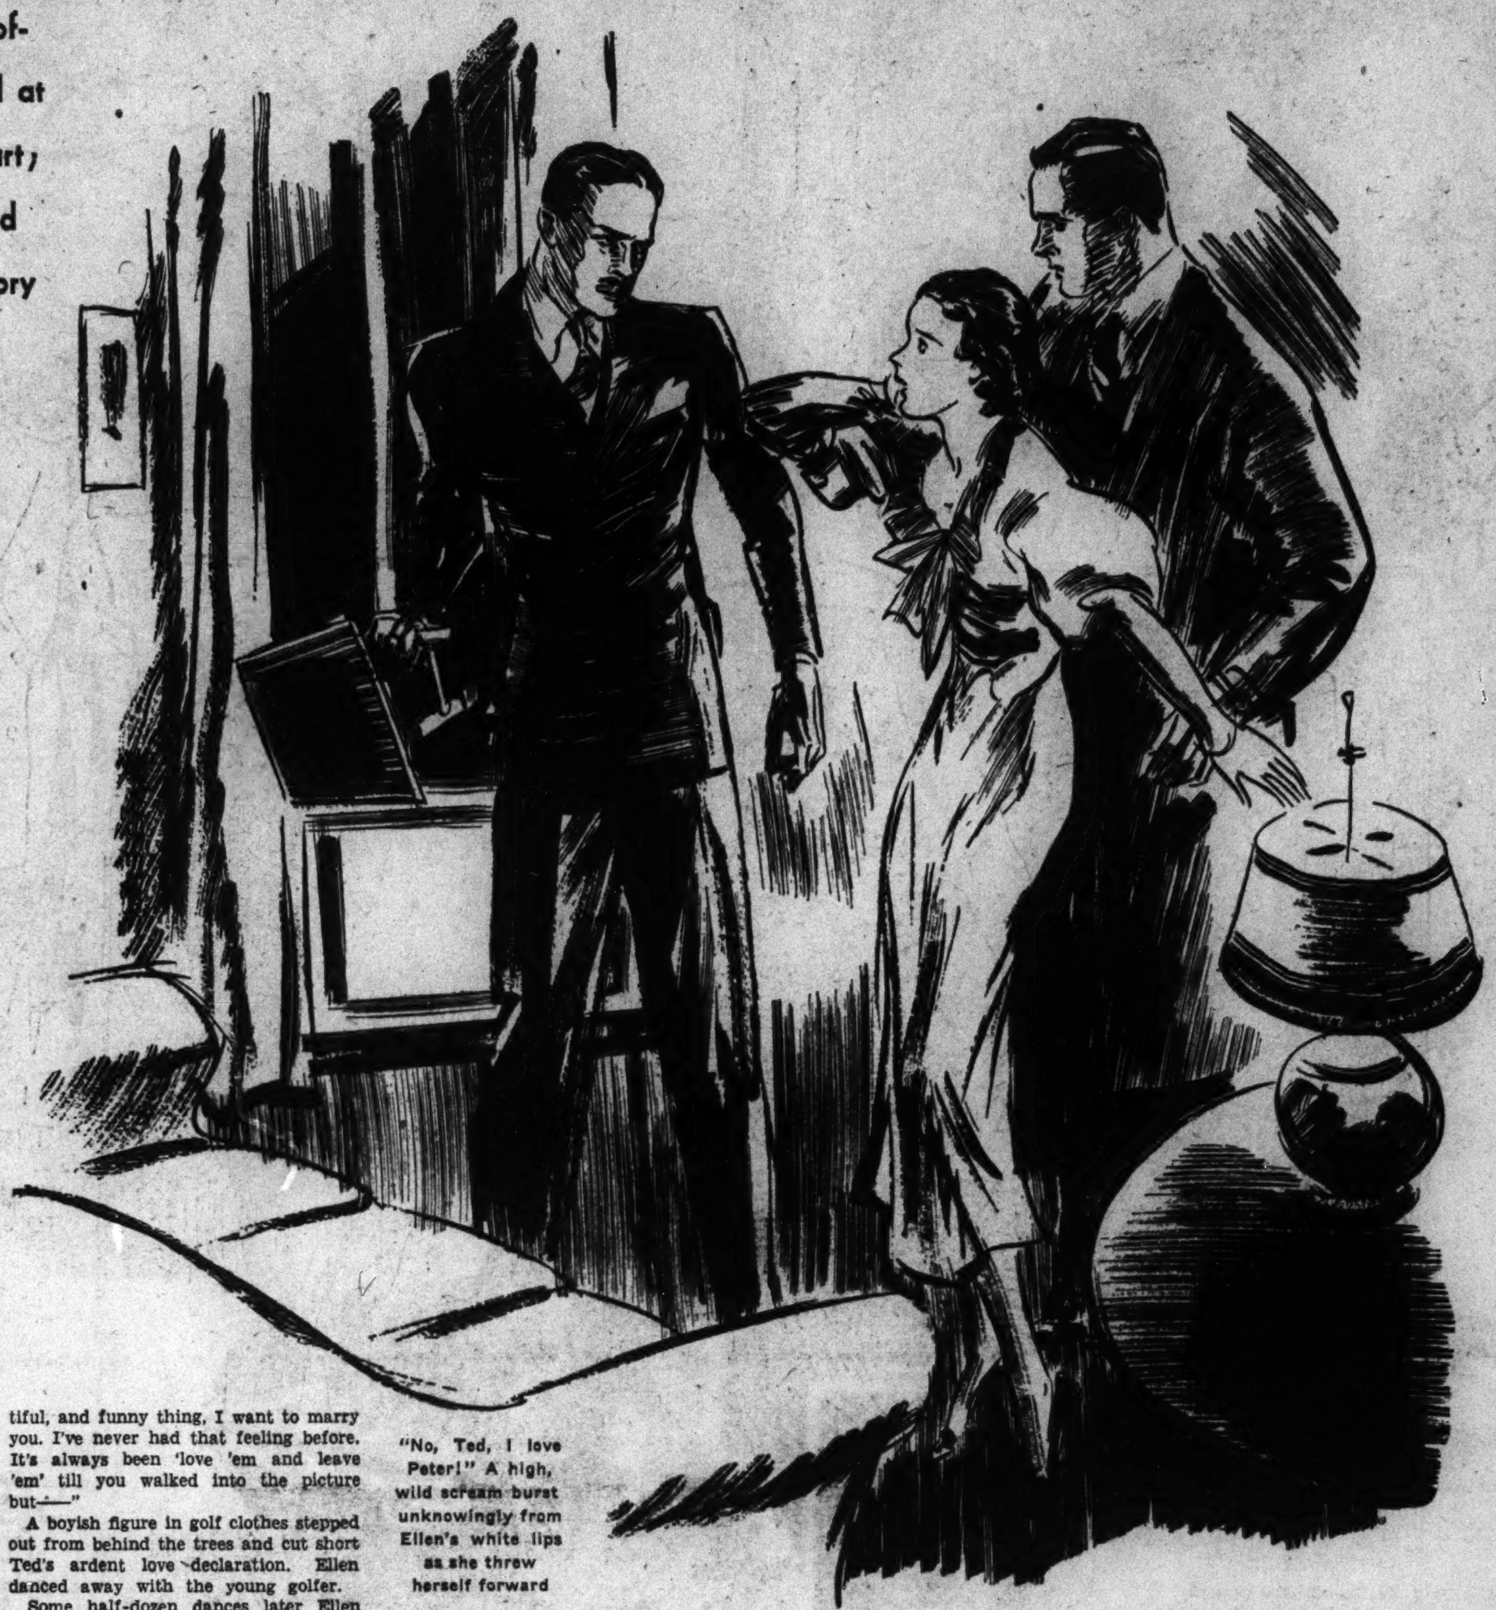
MARRY FOR LOVE!

by Lucie Clay

Romance From an Out-of-the-Way Corner Knocked at the Door of Ellen's Heart; and How She Answered Makes an Interesting Story



"No, Ted, I love Peter!" A high, wild scream burst unknowingly from Ellen's white lips as she threw herself forward

ELLEN POWERS wrapped her gay Red Riding Hood's cape about her slim, small body and jigged merrily about the disorderly bedroom. She and her roommate, dashing into their tiny apartment after work, had shed dresses, slippers, stockings, teddies, while grabbing a bite standing up in their cupboard kitchen.

Both girls sold cosmetics in the great department store which tonight was entertaining its employes with the annual fancy-dress party.

"But where'll I get my grandmother and the hungry wolf, Leila?" The soft redness of Ellen's mouth curved with laughter as she pranced about.

Leila, looking vivid in her picturesque gypsy costume, answered rather grimly: "The wolf's been camping on your doorstep so long, Ellie, it's time you chased him away. I'll talk to you, not like your grandmother, but like a Dutch uncle, if you don't come back tonight engaged to Ted Fisher."

All the gayety was wiped from Ellen's face. "I don't know——" she stammered and began to straighten up the room.

"Well, I do. I've told you before, you must get this silly love-idea out of your head. You'll grow old and nasty-tempered like our crabby boss, Miss Thompson, waiting for the right man to happen along and offer your his heart wrapped up in his money. If he's got money, that's enough——"

"But a girl wants love, especially when she lost her mother and father long before——"

"You'll be selling powder and rouge till you're 60. No, you won't, because by then you won't have that gorgeous skin and color. You'll be selling socks in the basement.

"TO THINK you've only to crook your little finger and you can marry the junior partner, but you don't know——" Leila mimicked Ellen's hesitation of voice and manner so nicely that both girls broke into a run of laughter.

"I like Ted," Ellen admitted, half in the closet as she hung up Leila's work dress, "but you know he's red-headed and says himself he has a filthy temper. He thinks it's funny because he throws things when he gets mad, but I wouldn't care so much for that habit in a husband——"

"Beat him to it. Throw things first." Leila had drifted back to the mirror to crimson her lips again. Then with a careless laugh, "Well, it's your funeral, child, if you turn out an old maid. We're getting there fast. Nineteen for me next week and you at the end of the month. Oh, I forgot to tell you, my big butter-and-egg man up home expects his divorce soon and then——" Leila cocked an eyebrow expressively.

"Oh, no, Leila," Ellen protested, genuinely distressed. "You mustn't——"

The buzzer sounded, and scrambling into their coats the two girls ran downstairs and into the waiting taxi. For a time they were silent in the unusual luxury of a taxi ride.

Ellen remarked suddenly: "Ted told me last evening his old college chum's coming to town tonight and'll probably show up at the party. Ted's talked so much about this Johnny Moore person I feel I know him like a book. An honor student but a regular fellow. Graduation day he had a bitter row with his father over his career—Johnny hated his father's business and wanted to be something or other different, like an actor or what-you-call-'em. Anyhow, he beat it and has been tramping around Europe ever since. Ted says he's frightfully quiet and shy and doesn't like girls——"

Leila's giggle interrupted. "His friend Teddy isn't like him in that respect. For a man of 25 Ted's had more love affairs, the store gossip says, than you can shake a stick at. What's his get-up going to be for the party?"

Ellen shook her silvery-blonde head. "He didn't tell me. He was so excited over his wire from Johnny Moore, but you can always pick Ted out of a crowd. He's so tall."

ELLEN'S eyes quickly singled out among the dancers Ted's tall, narrow-waisted figure in the swanky flying togs. As Ellen stood thrilling to the dance rhythm and the flow of color and light she was suddenly swept close into his arms in the fast foxtrot.

"Hello, lovely," possessively he pressed her to him. "If I hadn't been cut in on just then, I'd have done something desperate to beat the other boys to you."

Ellen asked: "Has your friend come? Johnny Moore, I mean."

Ted answered with unmistakable jealousy: "Not yet, but when he does, remember, you're to keep your mind and your eyes on me and only me." He held her breathtakingly close, but she managed not to fall out of step.

Ted drew Ellen to one of the many benches set invitingly under the trees.

"Sit down," he commanded, "and let's cool off. This outfit's hotter'n Dutch love. And speaking of love," he took her small hands and held them in his big, tight-gripping clasp though she tried to free herself; "I'm crazy about you, beautiful, and funny thing, I want to marry you. I've never had that feeling before. It's always been 'love 'em and leave 'em' till you walked into the picture but——"

A boyish figure in golf clothes stepped out from behind the trees and cut short Ted's ardent love declaration. Ellen danced away with the young golfer.

Some half-dozen dances later Ellen found herself dancing with Ted again. For a moment her partner said nothing and Ellen, hoping that he wouldn't renew his insistent love-making, drifted along in a dreamy enjoyment of the hauntingly beautiful waltz music.

His loud laugh startled her. "What bunk! The music, I mean. It's a song, you know. 'Love's a Terrible Thing.' It isn't. Love's fun and excitement. Love makes you a king for a day or a night. Then—pfft! But who cares! Go out and dig up another love. That's the modern way, isn't it, big eyes?"

Ellen tried to laugh lightly. "That isn't my idea of love, Ted. Love is for always. It's not tinsel, it's pure gold, gold that doesn't tarnish, that lasts forever. That's what I've been trying to tell you all along, Ted," she half-whispered, her head hardly reaching above his heart. "I want love. That kind of love. I want to love and be loved. You'll laugh, Ted, but I'd marry a beggar if I loved him and he loved me."

At the end of that dance Ellen and Leila were sitting together when suddenly there was the sound of crashing glass. The lights went out. Simultaneously the ballroom filled with smoke and several trees shot into a blaze.

Ellen had only a blurred memory of what happened directly after that. But she would always remember the screams and shrieks of the girls, the noise of people rushing madly about, voices "Break the windows——"

Then she felt strong, tender hands beating out the sparks on her cape, on her hood. Felt herself clasped in powerful, gentle arms, felt for one dizzily rapturous moment, firm, tender lips pressed to her own with all the fire, all the ecstasy of young love.

Her blood stirring in her veins to quicksilver, her heart beating like a wild joyous bird in her breast, she felt herself freed from that embrace in the dark. Heard a deep, quiet, steady voice, that carried over the shouting, crying, screaming; that carried above the panic, "Stand still, everybody. Right where you are. There's no danger, if you don't stampede. A defective electric wire. Orchestra, please play, 'Dancing in the Dark!' Every one dance! The party's still young. The dinner—prizes——"

The lights flashed on, the orchestra played its gayest, jazziest, the dancers crowded the floor again and except for a few blackened or burned trees and several scorched costumes, everything went on merrily as before.

Her pulses still singing, Ellen wondered who had rescued her, who had touched and awakened her lips with love. She asked Ted when he sought her out for the first dance after the fire: "Who stopped the panic?" and still quivering with fright and rapturous excitement, half-sobbed, "He saved me—with his own hands from a horrible——"

"Where do you get that hero stuff?" Ted demanded gruffly. "Say, lovely," he strained her against him so hard that she could scarcely dance, "better give credit to the right person! I don't want you to pin any medals on me," he went on with a hurt air, "but when a fellow prevents a stampede——"

"Then Johnny Moore didn't come," Ellen said irrelevantly.

Ted glanced about. "Don't see him anywhere." Then frankly jealous, he shook her a little. "Why this sudden hot interest in Johnny Moore! You might pat me on the shoulder for not going haywire like all the rest——"

"You were wonderful, Ted," Ellen said with unwilling admiration, "and I suppose I owe you my life. Really I was so scared I'd have sat still and been burned to a crisp if you——"

"Well, Little Red Riding Hood, why not let me go on taking care of you for keeps?"

But something deep inside Ellen made her shake her head and say, "Make me love you and I'll marry you whenever you like."

AN EVENING midweek Ellen tiptoed into the apartment, her arms overflowing with groceries and an extravagant cut of Leila's favorite meat. Ellen gasped, for dressed in a new jade chiffon Leila was sitting before the mirror, clasping on dangling gold earrings.

Leila laughed. "Surprise party. My butter-and-egg man just blew into town and we're steppin' high tonight. More news," she called as Ellen unwrapped her purchases in the cupboard-kitchen and prepared for a lonely meal. "The studio apartment next door got rented today. A man and his painting outfit. I heard him talk to the landlady. He sounds nice but I wanted to crown him for dragging the furniture about when I tried to nap."

"It'll be a nuisance having a man neighbor so close," Ellen was buttoning a bright blue smock over her black dress and rolling up her sleeves.

"A man-neighbor's a mighty handy thing to have around the house when your curling iron goes blooey." Leila in her cheap but smart black velvet evening coat had fluttered into the kitchen doorway.

"I wouldn't ask a favor of that man next door if my last breath depended on it. I feel in my bones I won't like him," Ellen declared unreasonably. "But why bother about him? I'm going to make biscuits for my supper—pity to waste your grand steak!"

"Most men like steak," grinned Leila and at the sound of the buzzer raced out of the apartment.

When Ellen was ready to pop her biscuits into the oven, she found, to her dismay, there wasn't a match anywhere in the apartment. She couldn't light the stove.

Suddenly she grinned, a long, amused, half-sheepish grin. She wouldn't trail downstairs to the other apartments. Several were vacant, several occupied by families who worked nights.

She'd eat her words and borrow some matches from the new neighbor next door. He was in, she knew. She could hear him moving about in his cupboard-kitchen which adjoined hers.

She knocked at his door and said smilingly, "Usually the newcomer has to borrow. It's the other way round tonight. My roommate's out and I'm ready to bake biscuits and not a single match."

A glance into the cheerless, untidy room with its worn, shabby suitcases open, but only partly unpacked, the model stand, palettes, half-dozen easels, unframed drawings and canvases strewn about, and Ellen, always a tender-hearted, impulsive girl, did the most impulsive thing of her life.

"You haven't eaten yet?" she asked eagerly.

He answered with no show of surprise at her question if he felt surprise. "I hadn't thought of eating—yet. I just finished a sketch that I must send out tonight."

"Then eat with me. Please, please," she teased like a child at his open hesitation. "I hate eating alone and I've a big, big steak and biscuits and——" She interrupted herself, to say with an engaging grin, "It'll be perfectly proper. I'm nice if I am Bohemian or unconventional."

"That's it exactly. You're so nice, so—unusual that I'm wondering if I dare risk it."

"You look brave."

They both laughed at that and presently were laughing again together over the simple but delicious meal which Ellen served in the tiny sitting room.

She learned several interesting facts immediately about her guest. He was 28, unmarried, had lived and sketched in the far places of the earth, and now intended to do a portrait. He had reddened a little when they had exchanged names.

"Mine isn't high-soundng," he said, but his chin was up. "Peter Feeney, but some day I'm going to make it known for good, honest work—not tripe like——But I'm boring you."

"You're not. I never was so interested in all my life."

She realized she had spoken the truth in the course of the next few weeks.

One Saturday half-holiday Peter surprised and half-frightened Ellen by asking her to pose for him. She flushed under the scrutiny of his painter's gaze. "Me pose? Oh, I couldn't."

Peter explained quietly as he led her to the model's stand, "I can do a good portrait of you, Ellen. Interesting. Portrait of a young girl." He muttered something under his breath.

Ellen caught only the words "chance—or own-up—failure."

So almost before she realized it Peter had decided upon the pose and commenced work.

And from then on, Ellen continued to pose in her every free daylight hour. Saturday afternoons, Sundays, sometimes even for a few moments after work. And many happy days followed.

The Sunday morning the portrait was finished Ellen gazed at it intently. The painted likeness of herself with the untouched, tender loveliness of youth in her face and youth's lissom grace and strength in her body.

"It's beautiful, Peter. It—looks like me, but I'm not half as pretty as that girl."

"I only painted what my eyes saw." He drew a deep, broken breath. "Pray heaven the committee——"

He changed the subject abruptly: "Let's go celebrate with a bang-up dinner at Cocoanut Grove."

THREE things happened to Ellen the next day, which was her 19th birthday. While she was dressing she had a wire from Leila, who had stayed away all night from the apartment.

Ellen read, "We're married and are going to Paris for our honeymoon. Send my duds to Hotel Savoy, New York. Wish me luck. Love. Leila."

Ellen's eyes brimmed with tears, and she said half-aloud, "I do wish you luck, dear, but I'm afraid for you. Without love——"

That afternoon Ellen was called into the office of the manager of the employment department and listened in stunned bewilderment while he mumbled something about orders from higher-up—sorry—but the gist of it all was that she was dismissed, without a recommendation.

When, dropping with weariness and worry, she let herself into her apartment after work she found a note from Peter. He had been called East and would be away several days. That was the precise instant when the third and strangest thing of all happened to Ellen. She knew she loved Peter.

It was enough to make a cat cry! But instead of giving way to tears, Ellen flew about, made herself a cup of tea and scanned the want ads.

For the next two weeks she wore out her shoes and her heart and her courage, trying to find a job by day and at night keeping the truth from Peter over their gay little dinners, for Peter had come back.

Then one evening when rain lashed against the windows and wind howled dismally about the rooftops and chimneys, Ellen sat alone in her sitting room. Peter was in New York again and might not return until the weekend.

Ellen felt lonely, blue. Suddenly she realized she was licked. She had no fight left in her. The buzzer sounded and she answered, praying it was Peter. It was Ted.

Like a whirlwind he rushed into the flat, swept her off her feet and set her down at last, breathless, speechless, humiliated and angry at the fierceness of his caresses.

When she tried to push him away he laughed at her helplessness, and held her tightly, kissing the top of her head, for her face was averted below his shoulder.

"I'm wild about you, Ellen," he cried in passionate excitement. "I dashed here from the train. Can't wait another minute. We're going to get married tonight—over in Windsor——"

Ellen broke in wildly, "Please, no, Ted. I can't marry you, ever. Don't you see I——"

SUDDENLY Ted's coaxing, loverlike manner vanished. His face darkened, his eyes blazed with anger. "You won't throw me down now, young lady. I've been playing around with you pretty steady and if I don't marry you things won't look so good for you——"

Ellen faced him, small, tense, unafraid. "Just what do you mean?"

Then, as he tried to smile and take her in his arms again, she stepped back and in his eyes read the truth. "Do you mean that if we don't marry you'll let people think ugly things about me and I won't be able to get a job anywhere in town?"

As he grinned in tantalizing silence, she flared, "I understand now. You had me fired so that I'd get desperate without a job and marry you."

Ted's tone was smooth, pleasant, but his eyes were hard and Ellen saw evil things behind them. "I'd commit worse crimes than that to get you, beautiful——"

"And get rid of me as easily when you were through with me," Ellen broke in, self-controlled again. "I'm sorry, Ted, but you're leaving now."

Ted's face flushed and his eyes flashed red fire. "No half-pint-size girl's going to throw me out——"

"I'm asking you politely to go now and I mean now." Ellen's jaw snapped shut so tight that later she realized her teeth ached.

Ted glared and caught her savagely by the shoulder. "I'll go when I please——"

A gentle, quiet voice, a voice that made Ellen's pulses race rapturously, spoke behind them: "No, Ted, you'll go now if Ellen says so."

Ted whirled about, his face distorted with fury, and roared, "Keep out of this, John, and stay out of my affairs. You tricked me into a crazy stunt——"

"Ellen's affairs happen to be my affairs," the gentle voice asserted and Peter stepped into the room, and closed the door.

BUT at that instant Ted turned into a seething, red-hot mass of fight and, grabbing a footstool, flung it violently at Peter's head.

"No, no, Ted, I love Peter." A high, wild scream burst unknowingly from Ellen's white lips as she threw herself forward between the two men.

The footstool caught her full on the temple and she fell into Peter's outstretched arms.

She found herself still in Peter's arms when she opened her eyes and tried to smile up into his gentle, anxious gaze.

"I'm all right now." She half-sat up, but, dizzy, was glad to sink back against that strong shoulder that was supporting her on the davenport. "Where's Ted?"

"Gone, child, and oh, so frightfully ashamed and sorry."

A short silence broken only by the splash of the rain against the window, then Ellen suddenly sat upright. "Ted knew you. He called you John. I remember now. He said you were coming to the party—you aren't——"

His face hidden against her, he said humbly, "I am. John Peter Moore. Can you ever forgive me for deceiving you?"

John Peter had slipped to his knees and his eyes were pleading with hers. "I love you more than all the world."

"More than your painting? You gave up a father and a fortune for it," she teased, but her whole being was flooded with the white glow of great happiness.

"More than my painting. I'd give it up for you, darling, for your love."

They looked at each other in a lover's silence, then he raised her hands to his lips. "You took a knockout blow on the temple for me tonight, darling girl——"

"But I said I wanted to marry for love and you're John Peter Moore, son of a rich man."

"Marry me and it'll be marrying for love. My winning that prize has reconciled father to my being a painter. I saw him in New York, but I've insisted on supporting myself with my work. Only, darling, without you there would never have been that prize. You're my prize of life and will always be."

Safe in his embrace, she looked up at him with dewy eyes, and as their lips met again in the rapturous kisses of young love she whispered:

"I'm not marrying John Moore, heir to his father's millions, I'm marrying Peter Feeney. He's going to be a famous painter some day, and I'm going to help him all I can as a model, but most of all with my love."

WASHINGTON, D. C., APRIL 16, 1933.

EASTER'S JOYOUS SEASON COMES TO BLESS THE EARTH

A Word About Memorial Trees And a Contest for Dewey Day

Dear Post Boys and Girls: A joyous Easter to you, one and all!

Besides the religious meaning of the day, it also tells of the renewal of life and the blessings of Nature which are given to us fresh and green and lovely this time every year.

Tomorrow The Post boys and girls living in and around Washington, who are not more than 10 years old, are invited to the Easter egg rolling on the White House grounds. President and Mrs. Roosevelt have issued this invitation and we hope that many of you will accept it.

If you go, be sure to act nicely; do not leave eggshells and other trash about, and be polite.

Washington boys and girls also have a chance to see the beautiful cherry blossoms on the trees around the Speedway. These trees were sent here by Japan years ago as a mark of friendship for this country. They are a wonderful sight and many persons come from other cities in order to see them.

Those of you who live where you can plant a tree this spring, remember the trees of the months just ahead of us. Plant them in honor of your birthdays in these months. For instance, if your birthday comes in April, the apple, peach and plum trees are in blossom at that time. It would be splendid to plant one of these trees in that month.

If your birthday comes in May, you can choose the dogwood tree, a lilac or a snowball bush.

In June, plant a climbing rose or a raspberry bush. July's child should start a black cherry tree, a summer apple tree or a deep red rose bush. August's child should also plant roses or a plum tree.

How many of you can tell why May 1 is called Manila Day? It is, of course, because of Admiral Dewey's victory at Manila in the Spanish-American war on May 1, 1898.

Four prizes of $1 each, two for boy contestants and two for girl entrants, will be awarded in the Admiral Dewey contest announced herewith. The essays should not be more than 400 words, and can be on any phase of Admiral Dewey's life. All the essays must be in the hands of The Junior Post editor not later than April 23. Write or type on one side of the paper and sign each essay with the name, age, address and school of the boy or girl submitting it.

Easter Morning.

It was Easter morning. The two children were so excited that they ran downstairs to get their basket. It was filled to the top with good things to eat. Bobby said, "We can not eat all of these. Let's make some other child happy like us." So they ran down the street till they came to the house. The woman was ill in bed, so she said, "Go open the door, child."

She was a sad-looking child; she didn't know it was Easter until she saw the basket the two children had. They gave it to her and she was so pleased that she kissed both. So they went home. They were very happy because they had made the little girl and her mother happy.

Bobby's Rabbit.

Bobby Brown was a lover of pets. He was a poor little boy and could not buy any. It was nearing Easter and Bobby was wondering what he would give his mother. Just about this same time his mother was thinking of what she would give him.

Mrs. Brown did not have any work and she was afraid she would not be able to give him anything this Easter. Then a thought came to her mind.

While Bobby was at school she was very busy working. He did not know what she was doing and was even unconscious that she was doing anything.

Soon school was out for the Easter vacation. Bobby set to work peddling papers. He got 1 cent on each paper and he peddled 25 papers for four days. Bobby went and bought his mother an Easter egg.

When Bobby awoke on Easter morning, there at the foot of his bed sat his mother and a rabbit. She kissed him and thanked him for the egg. All that day Bobby Brown was very happy.

April.

April is the fourth month of the year, containing 30 days. It was the second month of the Roman calendar. The name is supposed to come from the Latin aperire, to open, alluding to the season when the buds and flowers open. April was sacred to Venus and it has been suggested that perhaps the name was originally Aphrilis, from Aphrodite, the Greek name of Venus. VIVIAN STONE.

Thomas Jefferson.

This illustrious statesman was born April 13, 1743, at Shadwell, his father's home, among the mountains of central Virginia, about 150 miles from Williamsburg. His father, Peter Jefferson, did not belong to the patrician class, as the great planters called themselves, but he owned a farm of 1,900 acres, cultivated by 30 slaves, and raised wheat. What aristocratic blood flowed in young Jefferson's veins came from his mother, who was a Randolph, of a fine presence and noble character.

At 17 the youth entered the college of William and Mary at Williamsburg. He was a fine looking boy, ruddy and healthy, with no bad habits, disposed to improve his mind, which was naturally inquisitive, and having the entree into the good society of the college town. In this attractive town Jefferson spent seven years.

Thomas Jefferson entered the House of Burgesses in 1769, where he was a prominent member.

In 1772 Mr. Jefferson married a rich widow, who brought him 40,000 acres and 135 slaves. He had one of the finest private libraries in America.

From July 4, 1776, Thomas Jefferson became one of the most prominent figures identified with American independence.

In 1801 the writer of the immortal Declaration of Independence became the President of the United States.

The Louisiana Territory came into our possession during Jefferson's administration.

And on July 4, 1804, 50 years after he had written the Declaration of Independence, he died loved and honored by all.

Jefferson himself wrote the lines he wished placed on his tomb, which read: "Here was buried Thomas Jefferson, the author of the Declaration of Independence, of the State of Virginia, for religious freedom, and the father of the University of Virginia.

Mother's Day.

As I was walking through the meadow,
I heard the daisies say,
"Oh, Sister, aren't you glad That this is Mother's Day?"
Birds were singing in the air,
And little leaves were everywhere.
I heard them saying, bright and gay,
"Aren't you glad its Mother's Day?"
I went a little farther
And I saw a butterfly.
I looked up from the green leaves,
And into the bright, blue sky;
As everywhere they seemed to say
"Aren't you glad its Mother's Day?"
I started on, but stopped to say,
"How glad I am its 'Mother's Day!"

Jonquils.

Most Washington florists do not know what a jonquil is, even if many advertise jonquils for sale in the spring. The flower they sell for a jonquil is a narcissus but it is not a jonquil at all. It is an Ajax narcissus and the right common name for it is daffodil.

A jonquil has a very slender stem and usually two or three flowers are on a single stem. The flowers are about as large as quarters and have cute little cups instead of the big trumpets of the narcissus sold in Washington as jonquils. The flowers of the real jonquils are very, very sweet-smelling and if you ever smell one you will never forget the sweet smell.

The leaves of real jonquils are so narrow they look like long blades of grass. Ajax narcissus leaves are broad. Even the bulbs of jonquils are different from the big, fat, grayish colored bulbs of Ajax narcissus, for they are much smaller and have tough, shiny brown coats. Just as you can always know a true jonquil by the perfume of its flower, you can always know a jonquil bulb from those of other narcissuses.

William Shakespeare says, "A rose by any other name would smell as sweet," but an Ajax narcussus under the name of a jonquil will never, never smell as sweet as a real jonquil.

Easter.

MY BIRTHDAY.

In early times all countries did not keep Easter on the same date. The churches of Asia Minor celebrated it on the same day as the Jews kept their Passover, while the churches of the West remembering that Jesus rose on a Sunday kept Easter on the Sunday following the Passover day. Various attempts to reconcile those two practices failed and then the council of Nicaea passed a decree that everywhere the great feast should be observed upon the same day, that day to be the Sunday following the Jewish Passover—to prevent further disputes, four rules were laid down for the fixing of the date.

It was decided that March 21 should be regarded as the spring equinox—the time in spring when day and night are equal, that the full moon on that date or the next after that date, should be taken for the full moon of the Passover month—that the Sunday following the full moon should be Easter Day, and that if the full moon happened on Sunday, Easter should be the Sunday after. This plan has been observed ever since and by it the date of Easter is fixed.

It is curious that in arranging the date of Easter according to rule, the spring equinox is a calculated date and not the actual moon shining in the sky. The moon referred to is but a mathematically calculated moon.

The full moon does not mean a complete circular moon, but a supposed full moon, according to certain averages over a course of years.

All this is to due to imperfections of the calendar, which never corresponds exactly with the real movements of the sun and moon.

The Pets' Corner

Edited by Ding-How of Hydegree
(Mascot of The Junior Post.)

Bow, wow, wow! I have my eggs and baskets all ready for the White House egg rolling tomorrow. Not that an editor is given to such things as egg rolling, but I have to get in to cover the news for the Pets' Corner, bow, wow, wow!

Meggie Scottie Roosevelt says she will do all the reporting necessary. I better take my eyeglasses and my notebook along. I would take my typewriter, but some of those pets or boys and girls might play with it and break it. Of course, I am too polite to mention it, but I do not think that Meggie will be at the party tomorrow because she is not always good. Perhaps she can look at what is going on from the portico. Major Police Dog Roosevelt is coming right down and help to roll eggs.

Mr. Tweet Canary says he is going to the party in his canary yellow Easter suit. I have to smile because Mr. Tweet never really leaves his golden bungalow. But he has made up the best Easter song you ever heard. It is a good song and is fine for all day today, Easter Sunday, and all day tomorrow, Easter Monday, so there.

I have on my new Easter necktie and it is much prettier than Hop Toy's.

Sandy Orkney Terrier Gordon has a new necktie. But it is not tied as nice as mine. Hip Toy came around here with his new necktie on, but it was crooked. I had to laugh and put on my eyeglasses to look at it.

Hop Toy has been to another wedding. He had ice cream and cake again. Who cares; we have had some, too.

Little Margaret came down to look over the situation at our house on Sunday. She decided it was pretty nice and cooed and laughed a lot. She admired our nice bright curtains, too. Little Anne is coming this week. I will put on my eyeglasses and look at her. Neither little Anne nor little Margaret can write on the typewriter. Of course, they are not editors like I am.

The Hon. Mrs. Plum Tree Pekingese has just gone by with a new Easter hair ribbon of Alice blue. Well, I have to laugh, because Mrs. Plum Tree puts on so many airs because she went to Paris last summer. She never seems to know any news for the Pets' Corner.

Rain.

Rain, rain, rain, rain,
Beating on the window pane.
Wind ablowing through the trees
Howling like a swarm of bees.
Clouds a-hurrying to and fro,
Wondering where they want to go.
My! Why don't the sun shine soon
And make the clouds seek their doom?

Lullaby of the Winds.

Hear the music through the trees,
Listen as it rides with the breeze.

It sings a tune beyond compare,
Whistles a tune that dances on air.

It flies like an angel who's used to her wings,
Little realizing the joy that it brings.

No great musician could ever compose
A song to reach heights to which this tune arose.

It sings a song that no one knows,
It sings a song while the wind blows.

I give up, that song my heart wins,
The song they call "Lullaby of the Winds."

A Story From a Proverb.

"The end and aim of education is development of character."
—Parker.

To study from books is useless unless you follow the example written in the books. That is the importance of good books. Many people have had a good education and have been well fitted for life, yet they did not take advantage of it. A teacher can guide and show you how to shape your character, but she can not shape it for you. So each action in your younger years is a corner stone in your future. The good strengthens your character and the bad weakens it. Let us strengthen our character in our younger years and it will remain strong when we need it.

Spring.

Spring! How long have we waited thee. You do not arrive as does the autumn. He comes, a king, in rich garments adorned with bright jewels. His melody is crisp and cool, but the melody of spring is soft and haunting, filling the hearts of humanity with love and happiness. Spring comes, a simple maiden attired in green, with a garland of flowers entwined in her hair. She is here before we realize it, her sole messenger being a robin or a tiny crocus.

We learn that spring will take up her abode in the country where the laughing brook babbles with glee, but soon she sends her assistants to the city and there in parks and flower gardens, even in window boxes, the messengers stop and with their wands make buds and blades of fresh green grass appear.

The voices of children at play, laughter and shouts sound like sweet music to the ear. We work with energy and zeal, feeling young in our hearts because—spring is here.

The Cathedral.

Darkness, darkness,
Softly stealing from the corners,
Blanketing the stately pillars,
From the bent heads slowly rising
To the stained-glass dome above us.
Silent, silent.
Little candles flicker and disclose
Soft blue and green.
Murmur, murmur.
Voices raised in supplication
When—softly stealing on the revery
Sounds of music,
Softly rolling,
Softly, softly,
Gradually rising to crescendo,
Ringing, banging,
Then—dying to permit an echo,
Slowly, gradually, getting softer,
Fading off into the shadow.
On the floor the moon is shining,
Tracing patterns on the statues,
Slowly slips behind a cloud,
Leaving the cathedral in the dark
To sleep, sleep.

Knighthood of Youth Movement Good for Vacation Days

THE JUNIOR POST AIRSHIP

"On to the White House to see the egg rolling preparations for tomorrow," said the pilot as the editor came over to the side of the airship in preparation for the weekly tour of the air to let the boys and girls of The Junior Post Writers Club and the Knighthood of Youth know what is going on in the world.

"Yes, indeed," said the editor. "I would not miss the sight for anything, although, of course we will not have to tell The Junior Post boys and girls much about it for they will all be there. My sons and daughters are to be up bright and early tomorrow morning and I suppose I will be up early too."

"Of course," said the pilot. "My sister's boys and girls have signed me up too. They are eager to see Mrs. Roosevelt and Sistie and Buzzie and little Billie, the White House children and the White House dogs, Meggie Scottie and Major, the police dog. Meggie will have to view the sights from the portico, I am told."

"I guess the President will make his appearance to smile his way and wave at the boys and girls too," said the editor. "He certainly has a nice smile."

"I hope that all the boys and girls will circle about to see the cherry blossoms at the Tidal Basin before or after they go to the White House. They have never been so beautiful as they are this year. I think that makes it very nice, their blossoming just at Easter time. Of course, our American dogwood and magnolias add to the festive floral display of our National Capital this year. Did you ever see so many crocuses as have sprung up on the White House lawn?"

"There are the first of the delegates to the national convention of the Children of the American Revolution," said the editor as they circled over the Red Cross Building and saw the officers of the organization who had arrived in Washington to make ready for the convention that will open on Tuesday. "I think that it is a splendid organization and that all children should study American history and the great deeds of people who have made this country a leader among the nations of the world. It is a good thing to have these patriotic societies meeting just when all those prime ministers from overseas are meeting at the White House. It will make us all remember that George Washington believed in friendliness with all nations, but that he also put in a warning note against entangling alliances with any of them.

Then across the ocean they sped to London to see the king and queen walking in the park with their small grandchildren, Princess Elizabeth and Princess Margaret Rose.

In Paris they saw groups of American women making ready for conventions to be held the same time as the patriotic convention of the mother organizations are held in this country, mostly in Washington.

In Italy they saw Il Duce, Premier Mussolini, and all his family going to church on Good Friday among the hosts of other Italians who never fail to attend many church services on this day.

Over Holland they flew to see the former German Kaiser in his castle at Doorn planting his garden himself with the aid of his wife.

Message Is Given To Boys and Girls By Great Editor

A message came to The Junior Post the other day from the National Child Welfare Association, of New York City, which sponsors the Knighthood of Youth, the Nation-wide club for boys and girls under the age of 12 years, inaugurated in this vicinity several years ago by The Washington Post.

It was about the Knighthood and was from John H. Finley, the famous New York editor and welfare worker.

The message read:

"The true old times of chivalry, when every morning brought a noble chance and every chance brought out a noble knight, return to earth in the lives of the boys and girls of the Knighthood of Youth, for whom the daily tasks and experiences become glorified in the doing. It is by doing, rather than by hearing, that the habit is formed, and the program of the Knighthood encourages the doing, which finds itself translated into the noblest character. I know of no better way of teaching the nobility which the earth wishes to keep in flower."

This opinion from a great editor should lead more boys and girls to enter the Knighthood of Youth. By doing so they will be proud members of a national character-building club for young people and they will have good times and much fun. The Knighthood of Youth is a fine thing for summer time and vacation days, for it provides children with plans for sport and play. The Knighthood of Youth is really a game. It is a battle, too, in which you fight the dragons of bad habits. When you win in these battles how proud you will feel.

Send in for your Page membership button today. It will not cost you anything, and the other boys and girls will want them, too, after they see yours. Just write a letter to the editor of The Junior Post, The Washington Post, and your button will be mailed you at once.

THE STORY BOOK LADY

"Easter books and Easter cards," said Marjorie as she skipped her rope toward Mary and Martha as they waited for the boys and girls of The Junior Post Writers Club and the Knighthood of Youth to meet them under the cherry blossoms for the weekly pilgrimage to Story Book Land. "I really like the cards and books better than eggs and such things—or even new clothes. I think it is so nice to go to church on Easter morning and then come home and read all the nice Easter cards and read books on Easter."

"So do I," said Marian. "Mother gave us each a nice book on Easter for Easter which I have put in the best place on my book shelf."

"I like books on Easter, too," said the Story Book Lady, "and books on flowers and on spring at this time of year. We will look for them very carefully on our pilgrimage to Story Book Land today.

"If you see my grandsons let me know about them and I will buy them for them," said Mr. Gnome, who keeps the gate of the Fairy Tale Bridge that leads to Story Book Land.

"Oh thank you, grandfather," said Mr. Gnome's three grandsons, Click, Flick and Little Mick, as they helped their grandfather open wide the gate of the Fairy Tale Bridge that leads to Story Book Land. Then Mr. Gnome and his three grandsons all stood in a row and made deep bows with their green hats with scarlet feathers on them in their hands.

"Oh look," said Little Lillian, "a cherry blossom in the Fairy Story Forrest. Here are the Story Book Fairy and Merry and Jolly, the Story Book fairy children, all riding in air planes made out of cherry blossoms. They are so cute."

"Why yes, so they are," said the Story Book Lady, "the queen always seems to know exactly what will please members of The Junior Post Writers Club, and the Knighthood of Youth."

"Well then, here I am. I guess I will please you too," said a rabbit at the end of a Book Street. "I am the rabbit in Noah's Ark, and the rabbit by Herbert MacKay, and all my pictures have been drawn by Grace Lodge (E. P. Dutton & Co., New York). It is a great nursery mystery. Come right in and see it."

"Thank you so much," said the Story Book Lady leading the way. "What a nice book street. And, as you say, the pictures are pretty, not only of the rabbit but of Noah as well."

"Well, I might not be so pretty, but I have personality," said the Ugly Duckling at the end of another book street. "Come right in and see."

"Thank you very much," said the Story Book Lady, putting on her magic glasses and leading the way. "Let me see. It is called 'The Ugly Duckling,' by Isabel Proudfit, illustrated by Malthe Hasselriis (Robert McBride Co., New York). Here are all the wonderful Jans Andersen fairy tales come to life again in a new guise. Oh, we will want to read this."

"Well, don't forget me," said a boy at the end of a book street. "I am the Herd Boy of Hungary."

"Why, so you are," said the Story Book Lady, putting on her magic glasses. "Let me see, the book is called 'The Herd Boy of Hungary,' by Alexander Finta in collaboration with Jeannette Eaton, with 40 drawings in black and white by the author. (Harper & Bros., New York.) It is a cowboy story but different from those of our cowboys of the West."

Rules of Safety Urged in Playing In Summer Time

Summer playtime is just around the corner and there is one thought that members of the Knighthood of Youth should keep uppermost. It is to keep all the rules of safety.

In the glad spirit of play we are apt to forget sometimes that we must be careful and not get hurt. Play does not mean taking all kinds of risks just for the sake of showing you will not take a dare. You owe it to your parents and your home to be careful when you are out of sight of those who are in charge of you.

Naturally, the first thing that comes to mind is in regard to swimming. All of us can understand the temptation it is to go in swimming where we can on these warm days.

Two or three things must be considered, however. First, "Can you swim?" If you can not you have no right in any pool without the permission of your parents and in company with an older person. Some of you answer: "Oh, it is not very deep. Hardly over my head." That is not the question.

You should lose no chance to learn to swim under proper direction and in safe surroundings. Swimming is a life-saver for yourself and others, and you should learn to be at home in the water.

But it does not pay to be foolhardy and dash in over your head. Wait for those who can help you. Another thing, a rule of safety in the case of water sports is that you do not stay in the water too long.

Another thing to be taken into account is whether or not the water is fresh and of the proper cleanliness. No one wants to swim in a mud puddle, but sometimes boys are so eager to swim they will go into ponds where the water is so dirty their parents would be shocked to see them swimming there.

THE GUMPS
SIDNEY SMITH
DAWN AT LAST! ALL NIGHT CHESTER HAS HUDDLED, CRAMPED AND COLD UNDER THE OLD RAIN BARREL- HARDLY DARING TO BREATHE- ABOVE HIM THE GRIM BANDIT OF THE MOUNTAINS SAT, KEEPING GUARD, RIFLE IN HAND- READY TO SHOOT ANY INTRUDER ON SIGHT- ONCE CHESTER THOUGHT HE WAS GOING TO SNEEZE- AND HE ALMOST BIT THROUGH HIS HAND. TRYING TO HOLD IT BACK-
BUT NOW OLD MAN SUN IS CLIMBING OVER THE HILLS AT LAST- IT WAS THE THE LONGEST NIGHT CHESTER EVER SPENT- FOR SOME TIME HE HASN'T HEARD A SOUND FROM THE DESPERADOES- CAUTIOUSLY HE TIPS UP THE BARREL AND PEEPS OUT-
GONE! NOT A SIGN OF THE FOUR RUFFIANS OF THE NIGHT BEFORE- CHESTER WONDERS WHAT NEW VILLAINY THEY HAVE SET OUT UPON AS HE TIP-TOES AROUND THE SHACK-
SUDDENLY- WHAT'S THAT? A DREADFUL SOUND COMES TO HIS EARS- THE SAME SOUND HE HEARD LAST NIGHT- WHEN HE TIPPED OVER THE RAINBARREL- SOME ONE IS GROANING-
ONE PEEP IN THE SHACK WAS ENOUGH TO TELL CHESTER THE WHOLE STORY- THERE ON THE FLOOR- BOUND HAND AND FOOT LAY A BOY SCARCELY OLDER THAN CHESTER- HIS EYES CLOSED- AND GROANING WOEFULLY AS HE STRUGGLED TO FREE HIMSELF-
OH-H-H!
WHO IS THIS BOY? HOW DOES HE HAPPEN TO BE WAY OUT IN THIS DESOLATE SHANTY TIED LIKE THIS? THIS PITIFUL SIGHT GIVES CHESTER A HINT OF WHAT MIGHT HAPPEN TO HIM IF HE FALLS INTO THE HANDS OF THESE DESPERADOES-
WHAT DID THEY TIE YOU UP FOR? WHERE DID THOSE MEN GO?
QUICK! GET THAT KNIFE OFF THE TABLE AND CUT THESE ROPES- THEIR SCOUT SAW A BAND OF HORSE-MEN COMING AND THEY'VE GONE OUT TO SEE WHAT'S UP- HURRY, THEY'LL BE RIGHT BACK-
IT'S PROBABLY SOME MORE OF THEIR GANG- I'LL GET YOU LOOSE-
THE DISTANT THUD OF HOOFS- AND AGAIN THE SOUND OF HOARSE VOICES-
THERE THEY ARE NOW- THEY'RE COMING BACK-
DON'T GIVE UP- I'LL WATCH MY CHANCE AND COME BACK LATER-
QUICK! SLIP ME THE KNIFE- AND RUN FOR YOUR LIFE- HIDE!
CHESTER WAS SMART ENOUGH TO TAKE A BIG GULP OF WATER AND GRAB A COUPLE OF WEINIES OFF THE TABLE AS HE RAN FROM THE SHACK- HE REACHED THE BARREL AS THE FIRST OF THE GANG APPEARED FROM BEHIND THE ROCKS-
AND THIS WAS THE AMAZING CONVERSATION HE WAS ABLE TO HEAR FROM THE BARREL-
YOU KNOW WHO THAT WAS? THAT WAS OLD CHARLEY GUMP FROM SILVER CREEK RANCH-WHO DO YOU SUPPOSE THAT WAS HE WAS ASKING FOR?
I'D LIKE TO LAY MY HANDS ON THAT BRAT- HE'D PROBABLY PAY A HANDSOME RANSOM FOR HIM-
WELL- IF WE'RE GOING TO HAVE VISITORS AROUND HERE- I RECKON WE BETTER GET IN A LITTLE TARGET PRACTICE-
IMAGINE CHESTER'S HORROR WHEN HE FOUND THE TARGET WAS TO BE A TIN CAN PLACED ON THE OLD RAIN BARREL AND HE IN THE BARREL-
WELL- BOYS- COME ON! COME ON- LET'S ALL TAKE A TURN- GET OUT YOUR SMOKE WAGONS-
THERE GOES YOUR TARGET- NOT ONE MISS-
YOU CALL THAT SHOOTIN'- TEN TO ONE I CAN PLUG THAT OLD BUNG HOLE SIX TIMES IN A ROW-
Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.; Copyright, 1933, by The Chicago Tribune.
GRACIOUS- HORRORS! AND CHESTER INSIDE THE BARREL- A HUMAN TARGET- THROUGH HIS PEEK HOLE- HE SEES THE BAD MAN RAISE THE GUN- CLICK! HE HAS COCKED THE TRIGGER- HE TAKES COLD STEADY AIM- THE BET IS TEN TO ONE- WHAT CAN SAVE CHESTER NOW?
TO BE CONTINUED-

NO, I'M NOT MAKING A GARDEN THIS YEAR. TOO MUCH TROUBLE.
THEN MAYBE YOU'LL LEND ME YOUR GARDEN TOOLS. I THINK I WILL.
AVERY'S WELCOME TO THEM. I'VE HAD MY FLING AT RAISING VEGETABLES.
GIVE ME THAT SPADE, AVERY! THAT'S NO WAY TO SPADE A GARDEN!
YOU'VE GOT TO GET SOME PEP INTO IT. YOU WERE JUST SCRATCHING THE SURFACE.
WALT, HAVE YOU GOT A HALF A DOLLAR IN YOUR POCKET. MY MONEY IS IN MY OTHER PANTS.
I'LL BE BACK, WALT, AS SOON AS I GET SOME SEEDS.
GEE, WHIMPY, A KEEN PLACE TO GET WORMS.
SAY IF YOU KIDS WANT WORMS, TAKE THIS SPADE AND DIG THEM YOURSELVES.
WE'VE GOT ENOUGH NOW, UNCLE WALT.
LOOK AT THE SWELL OUTFIT OF SEEDS — AND YOU'VE GOT A NICKEL CHANGE COMING.
NO, NO, AVERY! THAT'S NOT THE WAY.
YOU MAKE YOUR TRENCHES FIRST AND PUT PEAS IN ABOUT AN INCH APART.
YOU CERTAINLY KNOW HOW TO DO EVERYTHING, WALT. I WISH I WAS HANDY THAT WAY.
THEN YOU STICK THE EMPTY PACKAGES INTO A SPLIT STAKE FOR LABELS FOR THE DIFFERENT BEDS.
GEE, WALT THAT'S CLEVER!
I CERTAINLY DO APPRECIATE YOUR ADVICE. YOU'LL HAVE TO HAVE A BUNCH OF CARROTS OR SOMETHING WHEN THEY GET RIPE.
I'M GLAD TO HELP YOU OUT, AVERY.
BY GOLLY, I FURNISHED THE TOOLS AND THE MONEY, AND DID ALL THE WORK! I MIGHT JUST AS WELL HAVE HAD THAT GARDEN MYSELF.

THAT'S WHY I MADE ALL HASTE TO GET HERE BEFORE THEY DO - NOW I'LL HIDE HERE IN THE HOUSE AND WHEN THEY ARRIVE YOU PRETEND THAT YOU SUSPECT NOTHING - AND LET THE TRAMP GO THROUGH WITH HIS PLAN.

The Pontine marshes of Italy, famous since ancient times for their balking man's attempt to reclaim the fertile land beneath from the disease-ridden swamps, once defied a court of law for more than five centuries when an attempt was made to settle the trouble there. In ancient days the tract of land that later became an unhealthy marshland was the site of prosperous cities—Suessa, Pometia, Ulubrae and 20 others were located there—all of which have completely disappeared.

Since three centuries before the Christian Era attempts have been made to rid the land of excess water during the wet season, and it was from this attempt the longest lawsuit in history was fought, only to be settled not in court but by building of the Linea canal, nearly six centuries after the case was first pressed.

Landowners in the Pontine district in the early part of the Thirteenth century attempted to rid their lands of water during the wet season by draining into their neighbors' lands. The neighbors, themselves with land inundated, quite properly opposed the plans.

The case was taken to court, where for 560 years suit and countersuit were argued for the original litigants, their children, grand-children, and descendants for generations. Often when the court would decide a point not acceptable to some parties in the case, they would take up arms and turn the suit into a feud. Unlike many long lawsuits that are filed and then forgotten, the Pontine marsh case was never in its 560 years in court allowed to lapse for more than a few years at a time.

The solution of the case, for the time anyway, came in 1790 when the Linea canal was built by Pope Pius VI to carry the surplus water out of the disputed region.
